INTRODUCTION

After thwarting a minor crime, a group of heroes are approached by government agents about a potential Skrull infiltration of the super hero community. With the heroes' help, these agents may be able to stop another secret invasion. But everything is not what it appears to be. Who is really a Skrull, and how does the Super-Skrull tie into all of this?

Welcome, Narrator, to the Marvel Multiverse Role-Playing Game! If you're a fan of Marvel heroics and interested in tabletop games, you've come to the right place. To dive in, you'll need a copy of the Marvel Multiverse Role-Playing Game Core Rulebook and some dice. This adventure provides you with everything else. Whether you're a seasoned gamer or new to role-playing, this guide has all the essentials to make your super hero experience as exciting as possible.

Roll20 Tips

This adventure was originally designed for the Roll20 virtual tabletop, and has now been adapted for use at any table! Whether you're playing online or around a physical table, Roll20 enhances your game with advanced character tools and easy rule references. We'll guide you through adapting any features unique to Roll20 to your own tabletop experience.

CHOOSE YOUR HEROES

Revenge of the Super-Skrull is an adventure for four to six players portraying a group of Rank 2 or Rank 3 heroes. Included in this adventure are six heroes for you to use (Ant-Man, Ms. Marvel, Hawkeye, Daredevil, Luke Cage, and Wolverine [Laura Kinney]). However, the following groups of characters found in the Marvel Multiverse RPG Core Rulebook are particularly well-suited for this story — feel free to adjust them as needed for your players:

- Iconic Heroes: Ant-Man (p. 139), Black Widow (Natasha Romanoff), (p. 146), Hawkeye (p. 179), Ms. Marvel (p. 211), and Spider-Man (Miles Morales) (p. 236)
- Hell's Kitchen Defenders: Daredevil (p. 157), Iron Fist (Danny Rand) (p. 188), Jessica Jones (p. 190), Luke Cage (p. 198), and Misty Knight (p. 206)
- Mutants: Mirage (Dani Moonstar) (p. 204), Mystique (p. 213), Nightcrawler (p. 217), Psylocke (Kwannon) (p. 221), and Wolverine (Laura Kinney) (p. 259)

That said, any of the Rank 2 or 3 characters from the Core Rulebook can be played, including characters made by the players themselves! As long as the characters don't have any strong personal connection to the characters portrayed by the Narrator in this scenario (particularly Maria Hill and Miguel O'Hara) and have at least a willingness to work together, they should be fine.

When choosing heroes, decide why the heroes are working together. The iconic heroes, for example, have all worked together in the past (primarily as part of the Avengers) — they are professional colleagues. The Hell's Kitchen defenders, on the other hand, are a collection of acquaintances, friends, and family that often find themselves on the same side of problems. Finally, the mutants are all part of the same identity, feeling loyalty to each other as mutants.

When putting together your own team of heroes, think about why they are working together. The three reasons we just presented are all good starting points. They might all be professionals, working together on the same super hero team. They might be a group of friends who sometimes work together and sometimes fight among themselves, but for the moment they're on the same side. Or they might have a larger social group in common, such as defending the same city or having the same marginalized identity. These are only some of the options available, but it's good to decide at the start why the heroes are a team. Even the best teams have tensions and dramatic conflict, but in the end they work together, so spend some time talking through why that is.

Players should also decide at the beginning of the adventure which team maneuver their team can utilize: offensive, defensive, or rally. See the Team Maneuvers section in the Core Rulebook, p. 38 for more information.

If the players choose characters other than those included in this adventure listed above, take a moment to duplicate the character profiles and tokens. They'll be useful in Acts Three and Four when the Skrulls attack them with copies of themselves. If the players chose from the characters we've listed, you can find duplicate character sheets in the "Skrull Duplicates" folder in your journal.

HOW TO USE THIS SCENARIO

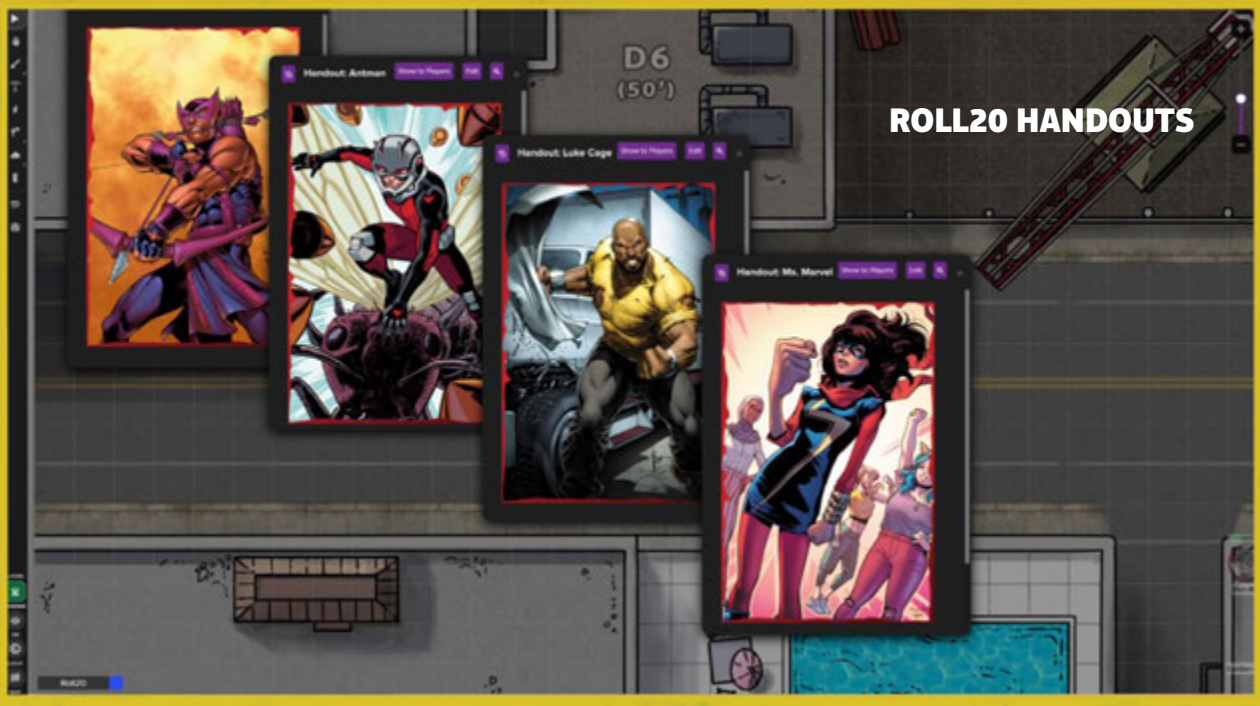

As the Narrator, you can use these materials to organize this adventure (or "run the game," in the common RPG parlance). We recommend you read everything in here at least once, to familiarize yourself with what's inside. Don't feel like you have to memorize everything — everything is organized to help you get to whatever information you need with just a few clicks. We've structured this so you can comfortably run one act per session in a couple of hours, or two acts at a time for longer sessions.

If you are running this as a self-contained story (or Single Issue), we've structured this to make it reasonably easy for players to learn as they play. All your players need to do is pick or create appropriate Rank 2 or 3 heroes, come to a quick consensus about why they're working together (although we give you some help in Act One), and dive in!

However, if you're planning to use this as part of an Ongoing Series, you may need to do a little more work to introduce the scenario. We provide a simple option in Act One — a bank robbery — but feel free to use an introduction more appropriate to your group's story. As long as the heroes can plausibly be approached by the Skrull infiltrators, any introduction is a good one.

In fact, absolutely everything in this scenario is flexible. Feel free to add material between the acts, or cut out scenes that don't make sense for your group. Replace characters with ones more appropriate. You can even use this as a starting point for a Series, and we provide some lingering plot hooks at the end that you can use as the basis for future adventures.

Ultimately, use whatever works for you, and discard the rest. There's nothing wrong with following everything here exactly as written, or using it as inspiration for your own improvised scenario. You can even use the characters, maps, and other elements in this scenario to make completely new stories. As long as everyone's having fun, that's all that matters!

WHAT'S REALLY GOING ON

When Skrulls are involved, it can be hard to tell if everyone is who they say they are, and what's really going on. This cloak-and-dagger feel is intentional, designed to leave the heroes (and possibly even the players) second-guessing what's going on. But we want to make sure you know exactly what's happening, so here's the secret background of this story.

The Secret Invasion

Several years ago, the Skrulls — a race of shape-changing aliens — had their entire empire destroyed. Left without a throneworld, they instead infiltrated Earth, paving the way for an invasion so they could claim Earth as their new home. Several Earth heroes were replaced by Skrulls as part of what is now known as the "Secret Invasion."

Discovery of the invasion led to an all-out conflict between the heroes of Earth and the Skrulls. During this conflict, Reed Richards created a device that forced Skrulls to return to their natural state, thus revealing which people had been replaced, and the Skrulls were ultimately defeated. Richards circulated the information on how to construct similar devices, which were installed into various scanners and security systems throughout intelligence agencies and other sensitive buildings all over the world.

The Kree-Skrull Alliance

Kl'rt, the so-called Super-Skrull, became one of many warlords seeking to re-unite the various Skrull factions scattered all over the cosmos. Through a series of decisive battles, he was crowned emperor of a reborn Skrull Empire that had claimed Tarnax II as their new Throneworld in lieu of Earth.

Over time, the Skrulls grew weary of the eternal war with their rivals, the Kree Empire. Both empires abdicated in favor of Hulkling, an Earth hero with both Kree and Skrull parentage. As Hulkling took on the role of Emperor of the joint Kree-Skrull Alliance, Kl'rt joined the inner circle of Hulkling's advisors. However, Super-Skrull had previously murdered Hulkling's mother. As punishment for his past crime, Hulkling transferred Kl'rt to diplomatic service and told Kl'rt he could never take a life again.

The Children of Lost Tarnax

During a cosmos-spanning conflict between the Kree-Skrull Alliance and the Cotati, a faction of Skrull extremists attempted to kill Emperor Hulkling. Calling themselves the Children of Lost Tarnax (a reference to Tarnax IV, a previous Throneworld of the Skrulls), these xenophobes renounced the mixed parentage of the new emperor and attempted to kill him, in order to reestablish a separate Skrull empire ruled only by "pure" Skrulls. They were defeated, but from the ashes a new leader was named: Go'bak. Go'bak declared any Skrulls who worked with the Kree-Skrull Alliance to be heretics.

Since the events of the Secret Invasion, Skrull scientists have discovered a way around Reed Richards' invention, so now Skrulls can maintain their adopted shape — and thus their cover identities. Go'bak has acquired this information, and plans to launch his own secret invasion — this time to cause enough mayhem among Earth's superhuman community so the Children of Lost Tarnax can lure Emperor Hulking back to Earth and capture or kill him with an imposter.

But What About the Other Secret Invasion?

If you or your players are up-to-date on Marvel continuity, you might know that a second Secret Invasion series (2022-2023) was released. This adventure was written under the assumption of happening either just before or at roughly the same time as that series. But remember that this is a Multiverse, so as Narrator you can adjust or modify the canon of the comic books in whatever ways you like to suit your own game.

Now

The Children of Lost Tarnax are in the early stages of their plan, and they have adapted their physiology to ignore the effects of the Skrull reversion devices using the information stolen from the Alliance. However, Go'bak isn't entirely sure it will work, nor is he sure new countermeasures haven't been developed in the meantime. As such, he plans to dupe some of Earth's superhumans into acquiring key information for the Children before taking the heroes' identities as part of the next phase of the plan. To further these goals, Go'bak and the Children have acquired an abandoned SHIELD safehouse and taken on the identity of unspecified government agents.

The Super-Skrull has learned of these plans, but due to the punishment given to him by Emperor Hulkling, he can't simply walk into their base and kill the fanatics that threaten the Alliance. While he's more powerful than most other Skrulls, the Children have larger numbers, and he can't be sure he can capture them all. Further, he doesn't have firm evidence of treachery beyond Go'bak's mad rants, and he can't risk a diplomatic incident with his own people.

As such, he has instead infiltrated the Children, hoping they'll make a mistake he can use as hard proof of their machinations against the Alliance. Further, by manipulating the Children's heroic dupes, he might even get the Earth super heroic community to do his dirty work for him.

ACT ONE: MISTAKEN IDENTITY

In this first act, the heroes foil a bank robbery, meet with the disguised Children of Lost Tarnax, and learn of the plan to secretly invade the superhuman community.

SCENE 1: DAYLIGHT ROBBERY

First, in the Page Toolbar, move the "Player" ribbon on your screen over to the bank page. Put the player's hero tokens in the space marked A1, the street intersection on the Bank Heist map (page 13). Then, read the following to your players:

The Big Apple National Bank alarms can be heard even in the street as you rush to the scene. On the street there's chaos, even more than normal for New York: people screaming and fleeing the area, cars abandoned on the street, and even a truck that has crashed into a fire hydrant. The doors to the bank have been blown off their hinges. What do you do?

This is a narrative technique called in medias res, where we throw the heroes into the middle of a situation. Since this is a super hero story, we're starting this scenario off with action! This works two-fold: both to avoid the players needing to immediately think of a reason why they would get involved (they're already involved!), and to teach them how the core rules of the Marvel Multiverse Role-Playing Game work, including combat. Plus, it'll help you as the Narrator get comfortable with both the game and Roll20 in a relatively low-stakes way.

Art by Will Sliney & Antonio Fabela

When Do We Find Out What's Going On?

At some point, players will want to know why the heroes are present in the moment. They might even need to know why they're even working together at all! We recommend doing this as a flashback after the events of "Daylight Robbery" are finished, but some groups might prefer talking it through beforehand, or even playing through a short prologue before they dive into the action. Let your players know that you plan to start in the middle of things, and encourage them to express their preferences before you collectively decide how to proceed.

So why are the heroes there? Start with thinking about why the heroes are working together (as established in "Choosing Your Heroes", p. 5). A professional super hero team might have been informed by the local police that they're closer to the crime, while a band of friends might have been on their way to do some personal banking when they stumble across the crime. Characters visiting from another country (say, Canada or Krakoa) might offer to help as a show of good faith to New Yorkers. Some other possible reasons include:

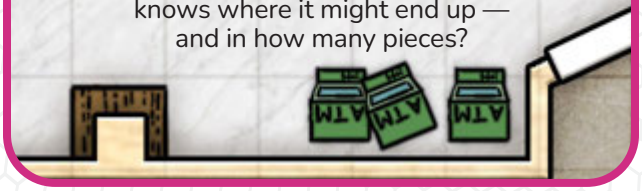

- Overhearing the alarm, or a report on police radio
- Getting a panicked call from a friend or relative who is in the bank
- Discovering the crime while on regular patrol of the city

Feel free to turn this question around to the players, too. If there isn't an obvious answer, or one that all the players immediately gravitate to, go ahead and ask them "How did you find the scene of the crime?" The answers might surprise you!

Roll20 Tips

Movable Objects

When it's Clobberin' Time, things get broken and thrown around. The maps are a starting point and may not survive the encounter. Who knows where it might end up — and in how many pieces?

A1: Outside

This is most likely where the heroes will start the scene. From here they can see panicked people, as well as a few cars. Most of the items on the street are actually movable counters, so encourage players to use objects like the cars in their super heroic actions… assuming they have enough strength to pick up a car, that is!

There are also some Average Civilian tokens around the map. These are mainly to make any fights on the street a little more interesting. Civilians can be captured by bank robbers, wander into the line of fire, or otherwise change and redirect the actions of the heroes (and villains!) in interesting ways.

Finally, there's one van on the street. This is the getaway van, with a Bank Robber driver inside. Use the Bank Robber Character Profile for him, if the heroes decide to confront him. If the bank robbers surrender and the driver is still on the street, he'll immediately flee the scene in the van.

History
This group of criminals desperately needed cash, so they decided to rob a bank.

Personality
This group of bank robbers lucked into finding a cache of super-tech weapons that were intended for delivery to an A.I.M. base. They decided to use these new super guns to rob a bank. They're ultimately cowards, looking for a quick buck. They would rather go to jail than face down superhumans for too long. That said, they are desperate, and they think their new guns will allow them to get away with just about anything.

A2: Bank Lobby

Read the following to the players:

The chaos continues inside the Big Apple Bank. The smell of smoke, heated metal, and discharged weapons fills your nose. A couple of civilians are lying prone on the ground, although you can't tell at a glance if they're unconscious or dead. A third civilian is being held at gunpoint by one of the bank robbers, in front of a large gaping hole on the west wall behind the cashier desk.

The two civilians on the ground are unconscious from blows to the backs of their heads. They aren't in serious condition, but will need medical attention soon. A Logic vs. TN 10 action check will further stabilize them, but a hospital will still be needed to deal with the concussion injuries.

The bank robber with the hostage is scared and is only keeping a hostage to avoid being hurt or killed by the heroes. An Ego vs. TN 8 action check will convince him to let the hostage go.

However, as soon as the hostage is clear, four more bank robbers hiding behind the desk at A3 will try to ambush the heroes. The tokens at A3 are only on the GM Layer in Roll20, so once they attack, use the Layers tool to make them visible to the players. (In general, assume the heroes won't be surprised by the additional bank robbers, given that they're walking into a bank robbery and it's unlikely all this chaos stemmed from a single criminal. However, if circumstances are such that you think they might be surprised, feel free to use the rules in Core Rulebook, p. 28.)

At this point, roll initiative (Core Rulebook, p. 27). The bank robbers — even hidden ones like the ones in A5 — all roll initiative as a group and go at the same initiative number.

A3: Desk

If the heroes sneak into the bank, they will find four robbers crouching behind this desk with pistols, waiting for their moment to attack. There are also a couple of bank tellers, tied up behind the desk — reveal their tokens with the Layers tool. Use the Average Civilian (Core Rulebook, p. 140) Character Profile for the tellers.

The door separating the desk from the vault area is locked, but there is a large hole blown in the connecting wall that's big enough for one person to walk through. Heroes with the Big trait or who otherwise are over 6' tall may have difficulty stepping through the hole, at Narrator discretion.

A4: Offices

Each of the other rooms in the bank are offices, with the one nearest the vault doubling as a break room. There's one bank employee in each office, tied up by the bank robbers.

This is an opportunity to adjust the conflict, if you desire. If the heroes are somehow having a hard time of it, feel free to declare that one of the bank employees manages to escape their bonds and get a hold of a gun, helping the heroes in their fight. Conversely, if the heroes are having an easy time of things and you want to prolong the encounter, you can add a bank robber token to some or all of the office spaces, as they guard over their hostages. The choice is yours!

A5: Vault

The bank vault is open, and three bank robbers are hastily attempting to get as much out of the vault as they can. Two are in the vault, while one is by the back doors, piling up the money to be carried out. If the heroes sneak in via the back doors, they may be able to surprise the robbers — otherwise, if a fight starts in the lobby area, assume that one or two of the robbers will come into the fight to help their allies, while the remaining robbers continue to steal as much money as they can.

The Police and Mopping Up

The police will arrive just as the heroes are finishing up with the fight: once the last bank robber is defeated, add a police car and two police officer tokens to A1. If needed, use the statistics for a Shield Agent (Core Rulebook, p. 232) for the police officers. Once the police arrive, they'll take control of the situation: arresting any captured bank robbers, calling for emergency medical aid for wounded civilians, and the like.

The police will politely but firmly take a statement from the heroes, before asking them to leave the area so they and emergency services can do their jobs. If the heroes are on good terms with the police, they may be asked to help with clean up and rescue services; if they are viewed as criminals, the police will pull their weapons and make a half-hearted attempt to arrest them before admitting they have no way to force the heroes to do anything.

SCENE 2: FLASHBACK

At this point, feel free to run a flashback scene set prior to the events of Scene 1, as per the sidebar "When Do We Find Out What's Going On?" (p. 10). Don't worry about dice rolling or Character Profiles for this scene — the goal is to just have fun explaining how the heroes got from their normal lives into the chaos of a bank robbery.

This is also a great opportunity for players to role-play and settle into their characters some more. One way to encourage this is to focus on each player in turn, playing a short vignette of what each character is doing prior to arriving on the scene. Let the player describe what their hero was doing before the call, perhaps even introducing new characters or locations. The goal here is to let the players settle into playing their characters and maybe showcasing something exciting or interesting about their hero.

If you or your players are stuck for inspiration, here are some vignette ideas to help you get started:

- Meeting with a friend at a coffee shop
- Reading up on some scientific journals at home
- Playing basketball with some of the local youth
- Walking through a park on a blind date
- Ordering lunch from a local food truck
- Arguing with a customer service representative on the phone

SCENE 3: THE SUITS ARRIVE

Once the mop-up from the bank robbery is underway, read the following to the players:

Three black SUVs with tinted windows pull up to the scene, and several men and women in black suits step out. One of them — a tall man with a clean-shaven head — pockets a small device and steps forward with a smile.

"I'm Agent Kurt, and we're agents of the U.S. government. Can we have a moment of your time?"

What if the Heroes Fled the Scene?

If the heroes fled the scene of the bank robbery before the police arrived, or were forced to flee due to a confrontation with the police, Kurt and his agents will find them wherever they've fled to. The Skrulls have been keeping tabs on the heroes, and have been waiting for an opportunity to approach them. Feel free to adjust the particulars of this scene in any way you see fit.

It's possible that some players may be particularly contrary on this point. Listen to your player's concerns, but if you need to, it's okay to admit that this scene is necessary to get into the adventure proper.

Kurt is actually Kl'rt, the Super-Skrull (p. 14), and the five agents with him are all Skrull agents (p. 15). These disguised Skrulls are here to convince the heroes to help them in uncovering a Skrull invasion. In fact, Kurt will mention that he's here on behalf of Maria Hill of the C.I.A., although his group is not "officially connected to any single agency." He says he needs the heroes' help, and he wants to take them to a nearby safehouse to brief them more fully. He won't yet mention that Skrulls are involved, and any attempts to push him on the matter will cause him to deflect and say it's better to talk in private.

Play this scenario as straight as possible. The Children of Lost Tarnax want to fool the heroes as part of their plans for their own secret invasion. Kurt wants to fool the heroes to get them close to the Children and discover their plans before they're too far along, as part of his plan to trick the heroes into uncovering Go'bak's plot without dragging the Kree-Skrull Alliance into things. So, right now, all the Skrulls are on the same page. Note that Kurt has investigated the heroes as much as possible, so he'll get an Edge on Ego action checks to convince them due to his Leverage Trait.

Here are some things the heroes might try during the discussion:

History
Kl'rt is an experienced soldier of the Skrull Empire. He was imbued with super powers by the Skrull Emperor Dorrek in a plot to gain revenge against the Fantastic Four, and dubbed the "Super-Skrull." While he would occasionally have the upper hand in these conflicts, he was regularly defeated by the team. He fell out of favor with the government and was exiled, becoming a free agent and often having an on-again, off-again relationship with both the inhabitants of Earth and his home race. Eventually, after the Skrull Empire had crumbled into factions, he joined the group devoted to seeking an heir to Emperor Dorrek VIII — Hulkling. The Super-Skrull revealed the truth of Hulkling's origin and his own role in killing Hulkling's "mother." As punishment, Kl'rt was forbidden from taking another life and relegated to diplomatic duty.

Personality
Kl'rt is arrogant, often considering himself to be the most powerful warrior of his kind, and possibly the entire galaxy. He is also extremely loyal to the ideals of the Skrull empire, even when his race has repeatedly turned their backs on him. He has grown to loathe the superhumans of Earth due to his repeated defeats, but his recent punishment by his emperor is forcing him to re-evaluate this hatred. He isn't adverse to tricking humans into doing his dirty work for him, however.

History
The aliens commonly known as Skrulls are actually the Deviant variant of their race, created by visiting Celestials in ancient times. Their amazing powers to assume any guise allowed them to drive both the original Skrulls and the Eternal variant Skrulls long extinct.

Over the past ten million years, the Skrull Empire has spread its influence throughout the galaxy — first as traders and then as invaders — conquering hundreds of planets, including the Andromeda Galaxy. After Galactus devoured their homeworld, they were scattered among the stars, but some recently allied with their ancient enemies — the Kree — under the leadership of Emperor Dorrek VIII, also known as the Earth hero Hulkling. These renegade Skrulls reject this half-breed emperor, calling themselves the Children of Lost Tarnax.

Personality
The Children of Lost Tarnax are, perhaps surprisingly, even more xenophobic and jingoistic than their contemporaries in the Kree-Skrull Alliance. Few of them would hesitate to give their lives for the cause. While these particular Skrulls are not as powerful as their commanders, they have been raised to believe they are the greatest, most worthy race of people in the universe.

- Try to determine if Kurt is lying from body language, micro expressions, and so on: Let any hero interested in this make an Ego vs. TN 16 action check (Kl'rts Ego defense) — you can tell the players that intelligence agents are trained to avoid giving away their true feelings. Failure means the hero believes Kurt is telling the truth, but they aren't completely sure. Success means the hero knows Kurt is holding something back, but he really does need the heroes' help. A Fantastic Success is the same as a success, but the hero suspects that the agents aren't working for any government agency, indirectly or otherwise.
- Read Kurt's mind: Powers like Mind Interrogation and Mind Reading could be used to try and read Kurt's mind. Kurt has a good Logic defense of 14, but he also has the Telepathy power set (which manifests as mesmerism), meaning he is likely to recognize such an attempt to read his mind. Kurt will attempt to Command any telepath who establishes a Telepathic Link with him to back his story up.
- Check with Maria Hill: Maria Hill isn't taking calls from anyone who doesn't have the right Connections. Even if a hero does have the right Connections, let them know it'll take a while to navigate CIA security and get a message to Hill.

Once the heroes agree, head to the next scene.

SCENE 4: SHAVE AND A HAIRCUT

Read the following to the players:

You follow the agents to a busy street with several storefronts closed or boarded up. Kurt directs you to an alleyway besides a barbershop that hasn't seen business in decades. The metal door leading into the shop looks rusted and locked, but Kurt pulls out a crumbling brick next to the door, revealing an unassuming slot that he inserts a red card into. With a soft woosh of air, the door slides aside, revealing several dusty barber's chairs, a couple counters, and a door to a side room.

Move the Players ribbon to the safehouse map, and put the player's hero tokens in B1.

B1: Barbershop Elevator (Secure)

The entire floor of the barbershop acts as an elevator into the safehouse. The switch to move the room between locations is in the side room in the north-west corner. Hitting the switch that activates the elevator doesn't require an action, but it does require a character to be in that room. The doors to the south are simple metal sliding doors.

B2: Scanning Room (Secure)

Read the following to the players:

This concrete room only has a yellow stripe on the floor in peeling paint, and a couple of machine gun turrets mounted in the far corners, guarding a large metal door. Kurt smiles at you. "Just a little extra security," he says, and strides across the room, pulling out his red card again. He waves it at the large door, and it rumbles open.

Unbeknownst to the players, the room is also a large security scanner, controlled from B3. The turrets are not automated, instead controlled from the rooms marked B4.

What if the Heroes Won't Go Along?

This scene is written in a way that the heroes should be a bit suspicious, but not immediately leap to the conclusion that the agents are enemies. Still, particularly paranoid characters (or players!) might struggle to find a reason to go with the agents. There are few techniques you can use.

The first is to remind the players that, even if the agents are planning a trap, the best way to find out what their overall scheme is would be to play along. This allows the adventure to move along more or less as written, but feel free to give the heroes an Edge now and then on appropriate action checks to help them uncover the true plot of the story.

If the players still aren't willing to go along, or if they have powers that make it easy for them to discover the truth about these agents, you can confide that this is the story you have planned, and to get things moving the heroes need to come along with the agents. Reassure them that their characters won't be punished for their actions — indeed, treat the characters as if they're playing along, as above — but role-playing games are a collaborative effort, and the players may need to bend a little in order to have a fun time playing the game.

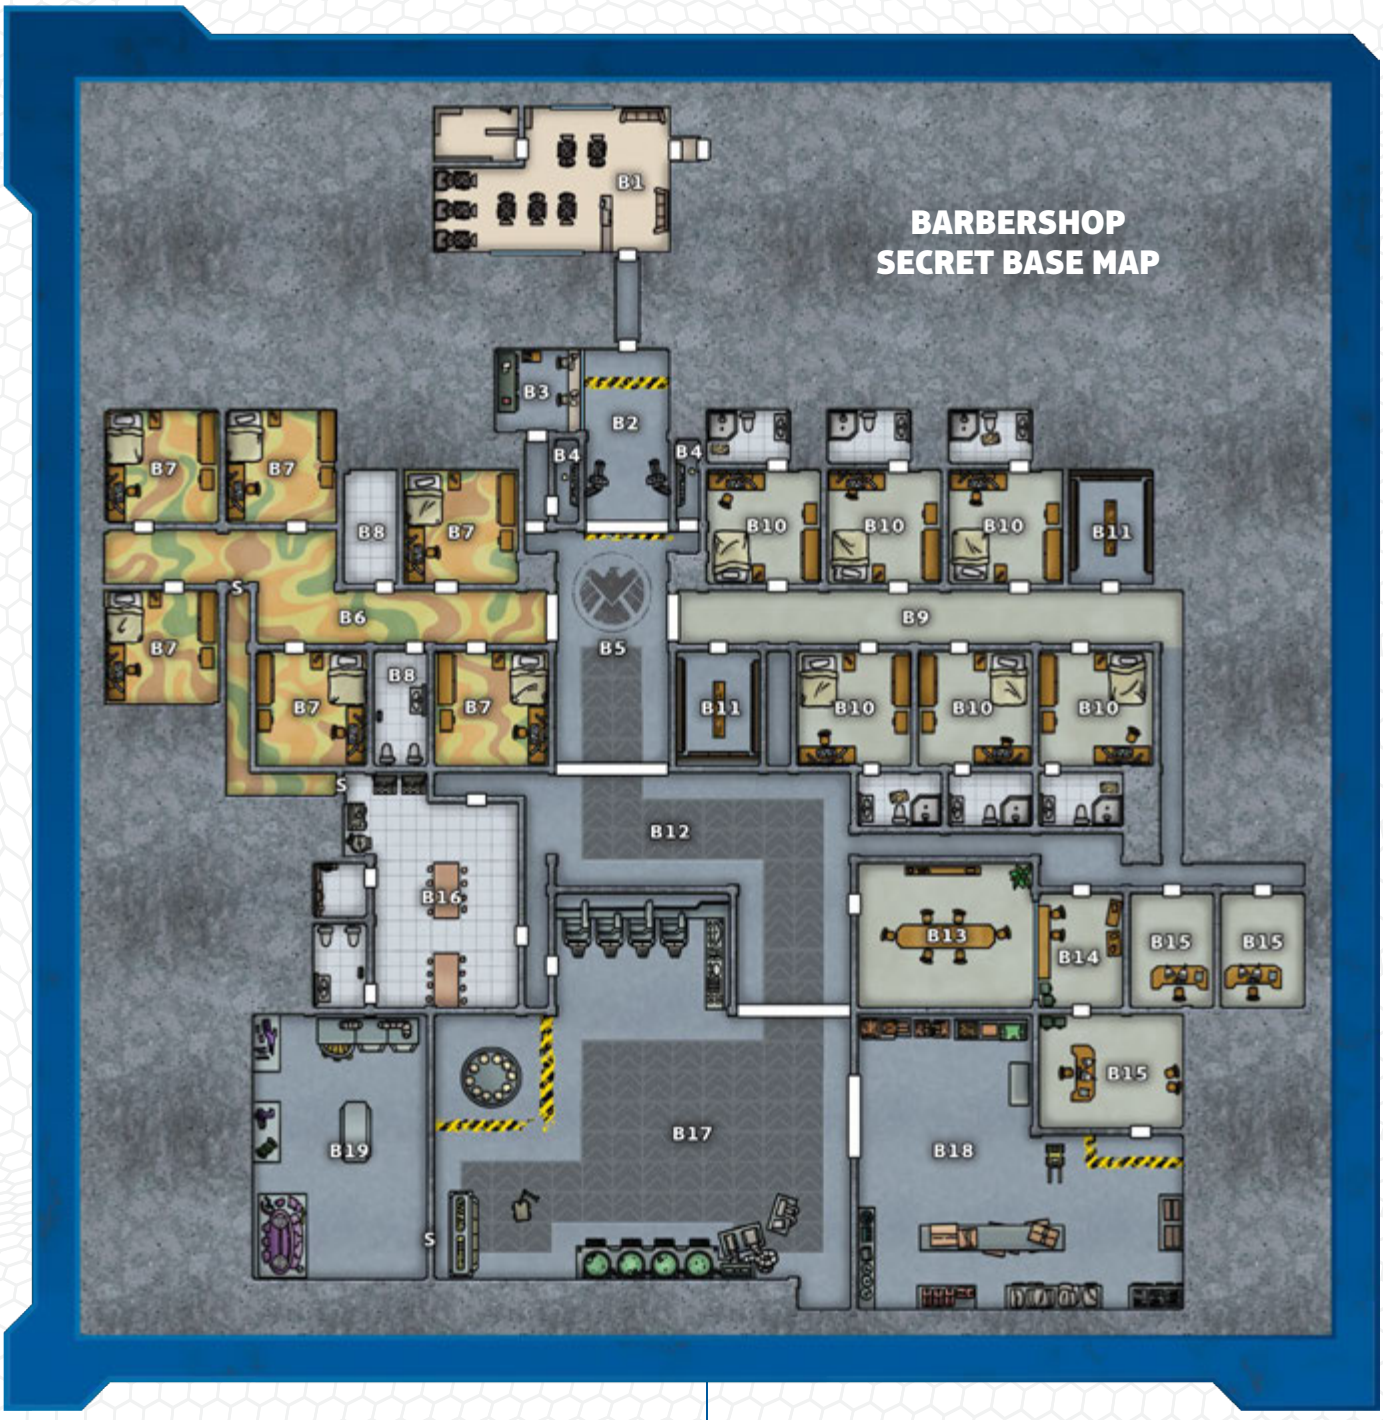

However, some players dislike this kind of out-of-universe direction (often called "railroading"). If that's the case, or if you'd rather let the players have more freedom in their choices, Kurt and the agents will leave the heroes alone. You can jump to Act Three, and let Miguel O'Hara approach the heroes with knowledge of the Skrull plot, or attack them for believing them to be Skrull replacements. That will also get the story back on track, albeit in an abbreviated form. The biggest change is that Kl'rt/Kurt won't have any incentive to help the heroes, making the Act Four fight more difficult.

The Two Sides of the Safehouse

The safehouse map can be used in every act of this scenario. However, what rooms the characters have access to, and what is in each room, depends on what's happened in the scenario so far. As such, we have two sets of descriptions: Secure and Alert. The Secure descriptions are the safehouse as the heroes experience it in Acts One through Three, where they are cooperating with the Skrulls (even if they don't realize it). Once the Children of Lost Tarnax learn the heroes are onto them, switch to the Alert descriptions, which will be covered in Act Four.

If the heroes try to get into an area that doesn't have a Secure description, use the Alert description. It's possible this change might result in the plot fast-forwarding to Act Four, however — if you're not sure you want to do that, reference the advice in the sidebar "What if the Heroes Won't Go Along?"

Characters with powers that can sense or manipulate the electromagnetic spectrum, or who have experience with such devices, might have a chance to notice the scanning with a Logic vs. TN 14 action check. Unless otherwise prevented, the scans will not only uncover any weapons the heroes might be carrying, but also store a complete body scan that the Skrull Agents can use for later duplication in Act Three (see the Superpowered Skrull Character Profile for more information). Having weapons will cause an alarm to sound, but Kurt will tell the agents to shut the alarm off and let the heroes keep their weapons. He'll direct them to B5.

Security Doors

Several doors on the map are color-coded: yellow or red. Red security cards can also open yellow doors, but yellow security cards can only open yellow doors. Uncolored doors can be opened by anyone. Kl'rt and Go'bak have red security cards, as do any Skrulls working in secure areas (such as B17-B19). The rest of the agents have yellow security cards.

B3: Security Room (Secure)

This room has two chairs in front of a couple of consoles, and a bank of monitors on the opposite wall. The consoles show a typical (if more powerful and advanced) millimeter wave and X-ray backscatter body scanner, similar to those used in airports. (The body scan information is sent to the computers in B17).

B4: Turret Control (Secure)

Inside these cramped rooms are just large computer screens and a console with controls. No one is in either room, and the machinery is powered off.

B5: Hallway (Secure)
Read the following to the players:

As you pass through the large steel door, you notice two smaller metal doors behind you. Ahead of you is another large metal door, with two more large doors on either side. On the floor is a chipped and faded logo painted onto the concrete floor — the SHIELD logo.

"A little something from the former owners of the place," Kurt jokes. He steps to the door across from you, and waves his red card at it again as it dutifully slides open. "Let's meet the boss."

Kurt directs the team to B12. If asked about the other doors, he brushes them off, saying "I can give a tour later, if you like."

B6: Hallway to Guest Dorms (Secure/Alert)
This hallway leads to the various dormitories, which the heroes can use should they choose. There is a red-access security door that leads to B16.

B7: Guest Dorm (Secure)
Each guest dorm has a bed, nightstand, a couple dressers, a closet, and a small desk and chair. It also has a hideous carpet that looks decades old. The door can be locked from the inside, but the lock can be overridden by a red security card.

B8: Restroom and Shower (Secure/Alert)
There's a gender-neutral restroom and shower on either side of the hallway at B6. Three people can use each room at a time.

B12: Nexus (Secure)
This nexus leads to various doors deeper in the safehouse. Kurt will direct the heroes to B13.

B13: Conference Room (Secure)
Read the following to the players:

In contrast to the faded concrete and metal of what you've seen so far, this room is fairly comfortable. A long wooden table sits in the middle of the room, with several chairs seated around it. Against one wall sits a large screen that's probably decades old, with a modern computer console hastily wired into it. Another wall has a large mirror, which hangs behind the man sitting at the end of the table.

He's wearing a suit similar to the ones the other agents are wearing. His hair is gray, and his face looks like it's wrinkled from years of stress and worry, but his eyes blaze with intensity. Kurt says "Let me introduce the leader of our operation, Agent Gordon," as the gray man stands and silently offers his hand to shake.

"Agent Gordon" is Go'bak, leader of the Children of Lost Tarnax. The large mirror is a one-way window from B14. Go to Act Two.

B14: Watch Room (Secure/Alert)
This room is on the other side of the one-way mirror in B13. Aside from a short desk, chairs, and a couple of tables, this room is empty.

B15: Offices (Secure/Alert)
These offices look abandoned. The desks, chairs, and filing cabinets are decades old and covered in dust, and the equipment is clearly outdated and doesn't work.

B16: Commissary (Secure)
The commissary has outdated but functional furniture, enough to comfortably hold eight people eating meals at the same time. There's a door to a gender-neutral restroom in the corner, and a larger steel door that leads to a walk-in refrigerator full of food. There's also a small sink, a counter and cabinets that have been repurposed as a coffee station, and a large vending machine that looks broken.

The vending machine actually swings on a pivot, revealing a secret door. However, the door is unknown to the Skrulls, and the pivot hasn't been oiled in years. It will take a Melee vs. TN 10 action check to open this the first time.

B17: Lab (Secure)
The lab looks to be only partially in working order. A large and ancient-looking machine in the center of the space has been demolished at some point in the distant past. Other machines and scanners have been jury-rigged with much more modern computers and consoles, but only some of them appear to be working at full capacity. There are three Skrull Agents in the room, working on the machinery to get it operational.

Four of the machines in the lab appear to be large glass tubes of some kind full of a strange-looking liquid. They are big enough to contain an Average-sized character. If asked, Kurt will explain that these were prototype Skrull detection devices before they were able to miniaturize it into a smaller handheld form. (Heroes with the Scientific Expertise trait will realize they are devices that have something to do with genetic engineering, but while they might have been cutting edge a decade ago, they are badly out-of-date now.)

On the west wall there is a large reel-to-reel computer bank, with just enough room behind it for someone to squeeze through. Characters that slide behind that console can find a secret door hidden there, which leads to B19 (covered in Act Four).

ACT TWO: SECRET A.I.M.S

In this second act, the heroes are directed to their first target: A.I.M. and their mysterious leader, M.O.D.O.K. Within the base they acquire a file, and start gaining hints that things are not as they appear to be.

SCENE 1: THE BRIEFING

Once the heroes are settled into the conference room, read the following to the players:

Agent Gordon nods silently to Kurt, who turns to you. "Agent Gordon has asked me to conduct this briefing on his behalf. Understand that what you're about to see should be held in the strictest confidence." He touches a few controls on the hastily-wired console, and the screen lights up, showing a green-skinned alien with large ears and a ribbed chin.

"This, my friends, is a Skrull. They're aliens from outer space, and they're trying to invade our world."

Go'bak and Kl'rt

Agent Gordon/Go'bak remains silent throughout the briefing, as part of a power play happening behind the scenes. Go'bak doesn't trust Kurt (who is masquerading as a different Skrull as part of his infiltration of the Children), but he also realizes that if this plan fails, he can blame Kurt and thus keep the loyalty of his followers. As such, he's giving Kurt enough rope to hang himself with, as it were. Kl'rt realizes this, and will use his access to the heroes to enact his own plan: slowly convincing them to uncover the plot without dragging the Kree-Skrull Alliance into things. It's unlikely the heroes will stumble into this, but keep it in mind as you portray the two agents.

Go'bak is a Skrull as per the Core Rulebook, p. 235.

Kurt's briefing covers the following points:

- The shape-shifting Skrulls have infiltrated the superhuman community, and potentially even the government. It's unclear how entrenched the invasion has become, which is why the need for secrecy is paramount.
- The agents have been tasked with rooting out the invasion. Because they don't officially report to any governmental structure, they haven't been infiltrated, making them ideal for the task.
- The Skrulls have tried several times to infiltrate Earth before. Past efforts by one of their favored agents, the Super-Skrull, were nearly successful. The latest attempt was much more widescale, and was only thwarted when Reed Richards (Mister Fantastic of the Fantastic Four) invented a device that forces Skrulls back into their natural form. This safehouse has been fitted with such a device, but the team have also developed a smaller hand-held version, which Kurt used before he met with the heroes.
- However, they've gained intelligence that the Skrulls have found a way to counteract the device. They've done this by infiltrating or working with A.I.M. The organization has found a way to circumvent the procedure. The agents need the heroes to infiltrate the A.I.M. base they've identified, and bring back some files located in their computers.This story is, of course, a fabrication, but most of it is actually true. The Skrulls are attempting to infiltrate — it just so happens that these are the Skrulls in question. The device does exist, and does work as described — in case rival Skrulls attempt to infiltrate their ranks — but the Children (and Kl'rt) have already found a way to circumvent it. And A.I.M. are actually researching ways to detect Skrulls outside of Richards' device, but they are investigating something, and Go'bak is concerned they may stumble onto his plans.

This "lie within the truth" approach is Kl'rt's idea — he knows that between his relatively-honest approach and his own mental powers, he can likely keep any suspicious heroes from suspecting the truth. That said, the heroes might attempt to discern that truth from Kurt in a couple different ways — use the advice presented in Act One, Scene 3, but a Fantastic Success reveals that there's some kind of tension between Kurt and Gordon, as if the two of them aren't on the same page regarding this operation.

The casual mention of the Super-Skrull serves two purposes in this scene. From a character perspective, Kl'rt is arrogant and not above bragging about his accomplishments — even if no one in the room (including Go'bak) is aware that Kurt is the Super-Skrull. As a Narrator, the namedrop serves an additional purpose: to get the heroes (and the players) thinking about the Super-Skrull.

During the briefing, Kurt will give them a read-only chip to download the information onto, and reveal the A.I.M. base's location: the thirteenth floor of a skyscraper in downtown New York. The heroes may have questions about the Skrulls and A.I.M. Feel free to read the history sections of their respective Character Profiles (Core Rulebook, pp. 235 and 138 respectively). If the heroes ask about who Kurt and Gordon work for, they'll be brushed off "It's classified, and it's best if you don't know either way, just in case you're captured."

At this point, Agent Gordon will ask if they're willing to help, and once they agree, offer to let them stay in the safehouse for their protection. If the heroes want to stay, Kurt will direct them to the guest dorms at B7. Either way, they'll be given a yellow security card to allow them to go through some parts of the safehouse, or to come back once they've completed their mission. If the heroes for some reason refuse the security key, Kurt will insist they keep it "just in case."

If the heroes decide to poke around the safehouse or do some investigation on their own before starting the mission, jump ahead to Scene 6: Poking Around.

SCENE 2: INFILTRATING A.I.M.

Once the heroes agreed to go after A.I.M., Kurt gave them the location of the base: the thirteenth floor of a skyscraper in downtown New York.

Information on the location is actually easy to get: The Bryant Tower is owned by Advanced Idea Mechanics, but they rent most of the floors out to a variety of other companies. However, like many buildings in New York, there's no "official" 13th floor — the elevator keys skip from 12 to 14. Any reasonable investigation into the building — a check into the building site records, talking to the construction company, setting up surveillance around the building — reveals that the floor is there, and that the windows on that floor are false. All official records point to the floor being abandoned, however.

There are a few ways to infiltrate the 13th floor.

The front door: The lobby at the first floor of the Bryant Tower is large and open. People are constantly coming and going from a large bank of elevators, and no one will stop the heroes if they arrive during business hours. Outside of business hours, the building is alarmed and has a couple of security guards patrolling the floor. A Logic vs. TN 10 action check will disarm the alarm.

Once in the elevator, holding down the "1" and "3" keys will take the elevator to the 13th floor. A Logic vs. TN 12 action check will reveal this, but the roll has an Edge if the heroes did some research into the construction of the building first.

The heroes will arrive in the hallway in front of C1, Reception.

The back door: There aren't many other entrances into the base. Although a violation of safety regulations, this is by design to ensure the safety of the lab. However, reviewing the building plans or talking with the building contractors reveals three possible entrances. The first is via the elevator shaft, which will deposit the heroes by C1, Reception. There is a large ventilation shaft that exits into C4, Ventilation.

Why Do the Skrulls Let the Heroes Go?

It might be surprising to find that the Skrulls don't pressure the heroes to stay with them at this stage. This is because both Go'bak and Kl'rt realize the heroes may still be suspicious at this stage, and a heavy hand to force them into staying could foil their plan. They each have separate things they want to accomplish from this meeting, however.

For Go'bak, his primary objective at this stage is to get body scans of the heroes in order to duplicate them. That way, even if everything else falls apart, he can at least move ahead with his plan to infiltrate the superhuman community with his detection-resistant Skrulls.

Kl'rt, on the other hand, wants the heroes to have access to the facility. His goal is to plant the idea of Skrulls in the heroes' heads and give them keycards, so they can potentially poke around later and uncover Go'bak's plot.

As the story unfolds and the heroes potentially grow more suspicious, Go'bak and Kl'rt will encourage the heroes to stay "for their safety." In Go'bak's case, this is to keep an eye on them, while in Kl'rt case it's to allow them more opportunities to find out what's really going on. While it appears all of the Skrulls are working together, in fact it's simply a matter that their goals happen to align until things fall apart in Act Four.

Finally, there's also a trash chute at C5 that leads down to the trash room.

Punch in: The walls are reinforced concrete and steel. If a hero can somehow get to the outside of the 13th floor, they can attempt to Plow Through the wall (Core Rulebook p. 41). It requires 40 damage to get through most of the exterior walls, and 20 damage to get through an interior wall. All the walls to C15, M.O.D.O.K.'s lab, require 100 damage. If they break through, place their tokens on an appropriate location on the map (C1-7, C12, or C13).

Blend in: The heroes can attempt to infiltrate, pretending to be an employee. Because A.I.M. has a high turnover rate, security is heavily based on security keys to get around the lab, so if the heroes can get their hands on one, they'll likely be let in without further challenge unless they obviously do not belong there. A.I.M. "beekeeper" uniforms are available in C2, so employees entering or leaving the building aren't obviously working for A.I.M. Still, a Vigilance vs. TN 10 action check will allow a hero to identify an A.I.M. agent out of uniform.

Art by Luke Ross & Matthew Wilson

Security Keys and Alarms

A.I.M. agents have security keys on them, which look like a rugged circuit board attached to a plastic handle (to allow the user to grip and slide the "key" into security slots). All keys look identical, except that some have blue handles while others have green handles. Unlike the red keys of the safehouse which also allowed access through yellow doors, the blue and green security keys here are separate. A green key will only allow access through green security doors and blue keys only through blue security doors.

Most A.I.M. agents will have a blue key, while some will have green keys. None will have both, because M.O.D.O.K. is paranoid and wants to make sure his agents have reasons to keep an eye on each other.

Each location below has two states: Secure and Alert. Assume the base is Secure to start. If the heroes allow an A.I.M. agent to set off an alarm, the whole location is considered to be Alert. Punching their way in will automatically set the base on Alert.

Blue and green security doors require 75 damage to punch through.

SCENE 3: FINDING THE FILES

Once the heroes have gotten access to the base, they make their way through stealth or force to M.O.D.O.K.'s lab. In the Page Toolbar, move the "Player" ribbon to the A.I.M. base page, reveal the appropriate location (C1, C4, or C5), and place the players' hero tokens in that space.

C1: Reception

The reception area looks like the reception area of any major corporate location: A large curved desk with a polite woman sitting behind a desk. She is actually an android built into the desk, so she will always be present even when "work hours" are over.

Secure: Read the following to the players:

Before you stands a large reception area. Aside from two security desks on either side, the large room is empty save for an enormous desk, which is completely devoid of computer screens, keyboards, tablets, or even scraps of paper. Behind the desk sits a petite blonde woman wearing a tasteful button-down shirt and blazer. She smiles as you enter. "Good morning! How can I help you today?"

The receptionist (who prefers to be called Annie) will continually ask if she can help the heroes. Regardless of their answers, she'll deflect and try to convince them they're on the wrong floor — no one comes to this floor unless they're an A.I.M. agent, so this is purely to keep someone who accidentally stumbles upon the combination from growing suspicious. It should be clear after a couple of exchanges that she has no intention of actually helping the heroes in any way.

A Logic vs. TN 10 action check will reveal that her body posture is unusually stiff, and she never makes any effort to get out of her chair. A Fantastic success informs the hero that her body language is artificial.

There is a single A.I.M. agent at each security desk to the north and south, not in their yellow hazard gear. They look bored, but are actually paying close attention to the heroes. They each have a blue security key.

If anything suspicious happens, Annie will use an action to sound the alarm while the two security agents engage the heroes (she won't make any offensive moves). The security guards can also activate the alarm from their desks by using an action.

Alert: The two security guards (who are A.I.M. agents) will attack anyone not dressed like an A.I.M. agent immediately, using their respective desks as cover. The two agents each have a blue security key. Also, the guards currently in C10 will arrive here in three rounds.

C2: Changing Room

This is a large unisex changing room, full of lockers. Several of the lockers have A.I.M. agent uniforms, all fitting Average-sized characters.

Secure: Two A.I.M. agents are here, in the process of changing into their yellow uniforms. They each have a blue security key.

Alert: The two A.I.M. agents here are fully clothed and will attack anyone not dressed like an A.I.M. agent immediately. If there is a loud, obvious combat, the agents from C3 will enter the fray. They each have a blue security key.

C3: Showers/Restroom

A combination shower/restroom area, with private shower and toilet stalls. The doors lock from the inside with simple latches.

Secure: Two A.I.M. agents are in here. One is finishing out a shower, while another is washing up at a sink. They each have a blue security key.

Alert: The two A.I.M. agents here are fully clothed and will attack anyone not dressed like an A.I.M. agent immediately. They each have a blue security key.

C4: Ventilation

An Average-sized ventilation shaft ends in the ceiling of this room. No other rooms in the complex connect to this series of shafts. The room itself is full of discarded cartons, boxes, and crates all sitting under a handwritten sign that says "We A.I.M. to recycle!" taped to the wall.

Secure: The room is empty, and the grate from the ventilation shaft is easily removed with a Logic or Melee vs. TN 12 action check.

Alert: The grate from the ventilation shaft is electrified and sealed with a magnetic lock. Touching the grate causes 5 Health damage. Shutting down the electricity trap requires a Logic vs. TN 14 action check. Opening the magnetically sealed grate requires a Logic or Melee vs. TN 14 action check.

C5: Trash Chute

An Average-sized trash chute leads from the first floor up to here. The walls of the chute are slick with old refuse, requiring an Agility vs. TN 14 action check to climb unless the hero has appropriate powers (like Flight or Wallcrawling). The chute ends with a large metal door that hinges downward. The chute and the room smell awful.

Secure: There is one A.I.M. agent attempting to throw some trash into the chute as soon as it opens. They are surprised (Core Rulebook, p. 28), and have a blue security key.

Alert: The chute magnetically seals, requiring a Logic or Melee vs. TN 12 action check to open. There is no one in the room.

C6: Commissary

This commissary contains several tables and chairs, a small serving area where food would be laid out, and a stack of trays. There's also a small beverage stand. Both the food and beverage area are connected to a large, strange-looking device — a custom-built food synthesizer.

Secure/Alert: There is no one in the area, although the food synthesizer doesn't work when the area is Alert.

C7: Storage

This storage room contains several sets of large metal cabinets, containing a variety of shelves. On the shelves are an eclectic mix of supplies: mundane office supplies like pens, paper, and ink cartridges sit next to power cells for A.I.M. weaponry. A few shelves have plastic jugs simply labeled "Food Synthesizer Compound."

Secure: Everything is accessible from the shelves. There is no one else in the room.

Alert: All of the shelves have rolling metal shutters that are magnetically sealed, restricting all access to the supplies unless opened with a blue security key or a Logic vs. TN 14 action check. An A.I.M. agent is here, loading a power cell into their weapon.

C8: Closet

This is a simple closet containing cleaning supplies, a broom, a bucket, and a map.

Secure/Alert: There is nothing unusual in this room.

C9: Barracks

The long barracks looks like a doctor's on-call room. It contains nine identical bunks with pillows, sheets, and blankets, intended for use by A.I.M. agents working long shifts or on-site security during lockdowns.

Secure: There are three A.I.M. agents here sleeping in various bunks. They are sleeping in their uniforms, and their weaponry and blue security keys are stashed under each bunk.

Alert: Two of the three A.I.M. agents are in the hallway south of the barracks, looking for intruders. The third stays in the barracks, checking each bunk. They each have a blue security key.

C10: Lounge

This lounge is a place for off-duty A.I.M. agents to blow off steam. There's a couple of vending machines, some couches and chairs, and a small coffee bar. Near one side is a large-screen television with a video game system connected.

Secure: Two A.I.M. agents are lounging in this area, wearing their uniforms. One is getting something from a vending machine, while another is playing a game on the television. They each have a green security key.

Alert: The two agents here have moved into the hallway by C1, Reception, in order to catch the heroes. They each have a green security key. The television screen only shows a red screen with the word ALERT in large, white letters.

C11: Monitor Room

Read the following to the players:

This large room is dominated on one wall with a cluster of screens, showing a variety of hallways all over the base. A few screens show other parts of the building, such as the elevator cars, and one or two are turned to international news channels. Another wall contains a rack of energy pistols and rifles, behind a blue-tinged force field.

The center of the room has six large curved monitors, with six A.I.M. agents watching them carefully.

Each of the computers tied to a monitor has security clearance to override the blue and green security doors. A Logic vs. TN 12 action check will unlock all blue security doors, while a Logic vs. TN 14 action check unlocks all green security doors. Both sets of doors are on independent circuits, so action checks are needed for each set.

The alarm can also be shut off from this room. The base does not immediately go to Secure, however — consider it to still be at Alert, but the A.I.M. agents will be less willing to shoot anything that isn't in a yellow uniform.

Cameras

There are several cameras on the map, particularly in the hallways of the base. There are also cameras in C1, Reception. If the heroes do anything obviously suspicious near a camera and fail to make a Vigilance vs. TN 10 action check, the agents here will notice and switch the base to Alert status. If the agents or the camera feeds here are neutralized, however, the base remains Secure.

Secure: The six A.I.M. agents here are unarmed, but they do each have a green security key. They are surprised (Core Rulebook, p. 28), but their first action will be to sound the alarm, changing the base status to Alert. The heroes will need to incapacitate or remove all six agents during the bonus round before that happens.

Alert: Once the base changes to Alert status, the force field by the weapons locker drops immediately, allowing access to the energy weapons within. Both doors to the room also lock, and can only be opened with a green security key. They require 75 damage to punch through. Each of the agents here will defend the area to the best of their ability, and each has a green security key.

If the base goes to Alert before the heroes get to this room, one agent will leave here and check each of the nearby offices (C12).

C12: Offices

Each of these is an office containing a desk, chair, and a computer terminal. The terminal is turned off.

Secure: Each computer terminal requires a password to access. A hero with the appropriate skills can attempt to bypass or brute force the password with a Logic vs. TN 13 action check.

Most of the files here are administrative: pay records, cleaning schedules, low-security email memos, and the like. There are some references to a project involving "tracking down a foreign visitor," however, but no details. (This is a reference to M.O.D.O.K.'s project — see Act Two, Scene 3 for more.) On a Fantastic success, they also find today's password for M.O.D.O.K.'s lab (C15) which was carelessly emailed to a colleague who had forgotten it.

Alert: As with Secure, but the action check to get past the password screen raises to TN 15.

C13/C14: Labs

Each of these two labs is where A.I.M.'s moderately-secret research projects take place. A large number of machines are present, each performing some discrete-yet-cryptic function. Characters with the Scientific Expertise trait will know this equipment involving studying and analyzing genetic sequences.

Each of the computers here is "air gapped," meaning it is not connected to any network. Accessing them requires a green security key as well as the daily password — both of which can be gained from each A.I.M. agent in the labs. The computers do not have any of the information the government agents require, but characters with the Scientific Expertise trait can confirm the information relates to genetic engineering. These characters can make a Logic vs. TN 13 action check to see that it's a lot of data relating to detecting Skrulls by reverse-engineering the Richards device.

Any character can make a Logic vs. TN 10 action check to determine that A.I.M. is indeed studying Skrull detection methods, but this data isn't the conclusive information that Gordon needs.

Secure: Each lab has four A.I.M. agents working as lab researchers. They will be surprised if the heroes attack them. If an A.I.M. agent can get to one of the computer consoles, they can use their action to sound the alarm, sending the base to Alert status. Each agent has a green security key, and knows the password to the computers in their lab.

Alert: Each of the A.I.M. agents are armed and ready for anyone to attack them. Each agent has a green security key, and knows the password to the computers in their lab.

C15: M.O.D.O.K. Lab

The door to M.O.D.O.K.'s lab can only be opened by using both a blue and green security key. It also requires a verbal password, which only M.O.D.O.K. and the A.I.M. agents inside the lab know — although it is possible for the heroes to acquire it from one of the offices at C12. The door will open without the password, but it will set off an alarm, immediately putting the base on Alert status.

Alternatively, the door can be destroyed if it takes 100 damage. This also sets off the alarm and puts the base on Alert status.

Once the heroes gain access to the lab, go to Scene 3.

SCENE 4: BEHOLD THE FURY OF M.O.D.O.K.!

Read the following to the players:

Past the massive door, you see there's metal grating all around you, with a ramp leading down to the main floor area. Yellow-suited scientists are working all through the room. In the center, much like a throne, sits a massive device. Upon the device floats a man. He has arms and legs coated in a technical suit of some kind, but his body has been replaced with that of a giant head. This is the notorious M.O.D.O.K., leader of A.I.M.

- If the base is on Secure status:

The people in the lab scurry from station to station as the face on the giant head screams. "Faster! Work faster! I want results!"

- If the base is on Alert status:

The face on the head looks at you. "You! What are you doing here? Attack!"

There are eight A.I.M. agents in the room, along with M.O.D.O.K.

A Tough Fight

This fight may be more difficult than usual for the heroes, and that's intentional. The goal of this scene is to find the computer file in question and escape, not defeat every enemy in the room. Feel free to plainly express this to the players — not every fight in a Marvel comic ends with one side unconscious. That said, if you prefer to scale down the conflict, feel free to reduce the number of agents to four.

Each of the large machines on the map are Average size. They break line of sight, although characters on the metal grating by the door are five feet above the rest of the floor.

Tactics

The A.I.M. agents will attempt to protect the equipment and M.O.D.O.K.

M.O.D.O.K. will attempt to use his Telepathic Link on the heroes, one at a time. He'll need to force a link, making a Logic check against the target's Vigilance defense. If he establishes a link, he'll use Command or Orders (if they have no Focus left) to get the hero to attack one of their allies. If he fails to establish a link, he'll move on to another hero next turn.

If M.O.D.O.K. is directly threatened, he'll switch to his Telekinesis and Elemental Control powers to protect himself while attempting to escape. He will abandon his agents and bots without any remorse. If he manages to escape, the A.I.M. agents will surrender.

The Needed File

The console to the left of the door, as well as the one nearby M.O.D.O.K.'s throne, both contain the file that the Skrull agents require. It takes two actions to download the encrypted file onto the read-only data chip. The encryption can be broken, but it will take time to do so — more time than a fight with A.I.M. will allow. A casual skim of the file, however, contains a reference to "finding foreign invaders."

If the heroes are able to decrypt the file on their own — because of their powers, particularly Fantastic rolls, or because they made a copy to work on in their own time — they realize it's data relating to the Richards device and mentions Reed Richards a lot. A Logic vs. TN 10 action check reveals that it contains theories on how detectors like what Reed Richards built could be defeated. A Fantastic Success shows that it contains field data implying Skrulls have learned to defeat Reed Richard's detector, as well as theories on how they defeated it, and on how to build better detectors.

SCENE 5: BACK TO BASE

Once the heroes have the file, they can return to the safehouse. Read the following to the players:

You make your way back to the abandoned barbershop. The next trip underground isn't as surreal as the first time. You show your yellow card to the large metal door, and it dutifully rolls away, allowing you access.

As you step across, an agent steps forward and wordlessly leads you back to the conference room, where you see Agents Kurt and Gordon sitting at the table. Kurt smiles as you enter, but Gordon looks stone-faced. There's a tension in the air, as if they have been arguing.

"Come in, sit down. How'd it go?" Kurt asks.

The heroes are encouraged to report on their findings. If they have the data chip, Gordon will speak up (one of the rare times he actually does speak), demanding it be handed over. Once the heroes do so, he keeps hold of it until the heroes leave or go to their dorms. Any requests for a copy will be ignored. If they refuse to hand over the data, Gordon will threaten them then attempt to capture them, moving the action to Act Four, Scene 1b.

There are some permutations, based on how the conflict in Act Two, Scene 3 went:

- If the heroes captured an A.I.M. agent, Kurt will thank them and lock the agent in one of the offices at B15. Once the heroes have left or gone to their dorms, the A.I.M. agent is moved to the storage area (B18).

Art by Scott Hepburn & Carlos Lopez

- If the heroes captured M.O.D.O.K., Gordon and Kurt will both be shocked. Kurt admits they have no way to detain M.O.D.O.K. for any length of time. Eventually, they'll take M.O.D.O.K. to the lab (B17) and try to wire him up to the large device in the center of the room. Kurt will explain to the heroes that it'll take some time to get the device working, and encourage them to stay the night (see below). M.O.D.O.K., for his part, will refuse to answer questions and claim they are all out to thwart his plans (which he won't elaborate on) until one of the agents shocks him into unconsciousness.
- If the heroes failed to get the file, Kurt and Gordon will act concerned. They'll interrogate any A.I.M. agents that are captured, but they'll become insistent that the heroes are in danger (see below). The Skrull agents will conduct their own raid on the A.I.M. base that evening to get the information, since M.O.D.O.K. is most likely captured, incapacitated, or fleeing to a new base of operations.

Regardless of the outcome from Act Two, Scene 3, both Kurt and Gordon will encourage the heroes to rest in the dorms on base. This is primarily because they claim that A.I.M. and their "Skrull masters" will probably be onto the heroes now, but also it's a safe place for the heroes to rest and recover.

If the heroes refuse, Kurt will remind them that the heroes might be replaced by Skrulls, and by staying on base, the agents can be sure they haven't been. If they continue to insist on leaving, Gordon will slam his fists down on the conference table and tell them they don't have a choice. Kurt, however, will override Gordon and tell the heroes they're free to go, but they should come back tomorrow once the agents have had a chance to decrypt the file (or interrogate the captives). It's clear there's some tension between Gordon and Kurt.

Art by Declan Shalvey

If the heroes decide to get some rest, go to Act Three. If they decide instead to do some investigation on their own or catch up on their private lives, go to Scene 6.

SCENE 6: POKING AROUND

There are two different ways this scene can play out, depending on whether the heroes head back to their own lives or stay in the safehouse.

Head Back

If the heroes refuse to stay in the safehouse, they can try to do some investigation on their own.

- Personal business: If the heroes want to conduct personal business like checking in with loved ones, spending time in their alternate identities, and the like, let them. If this adventure is part of an Ongoing Series, this is a great time to get some role-playing in and progress any subplots you have in mind as Narrator, or introduce new characters that might be useful in future adventures.
- C.I.A./Maria Hill: Maria Hill is still "unavailable" and not returning calls. If a hero has Connections that give them access to the C.I.A. or any other government agency, they'll be told that they don't know of any secret group of agents investigating an alien invasion, but then again such an operation might be too highly classified for them to know.
- A.I.M.: The A.I.M. base is in the process of being abandoned if the heroes go back that evening — M.O.D.O.K. and any remaining A.I.M. bots are gone, although the A.I.M. agents are still there to hastily shut everything down. If the heroes go back after not being able to deliver the file, they might run into the Skrull agents who are conducting their own raid! Add a few Skrull agents to the A.I.M. base map in their Skrull form.

Stay in the Safehouse

If the heroes decide to stay in the safehouse, they'll be given access to the guest dorms, but told they won't have permission to use the barbershop elevator until their next mission. They also won't be able to call or contact anyone — the base is too far underground for cellphone reception, and the rest of the base is cut off from all but the most rudimentary Internet access, partially for security reasons and partially because most of the equipment is antiquated.

If the players want to unwind or mingle with the agents, they can do so. Like with "personal business" (above), it's a chance for some role-play, allowing the players to refine how the heroes interact as a team or settle into their characters more. The heroes can go anywhere their yellow access allows them to, aside from outside the base.

However, if the heroes want to use the opportunity to actually sneak around and find out what's really going on, they may have the chance to stumble into parts of the safehouse that end up revealing the Skrull's master plan. If they gain access to any area that requires a red security card or the secret Skrull lab (B19), check the advice in the sidebar "What if the Heroes Won't Go Along?" or just skip right to Act Four. The file decryption is happening in the secret lab.

ACT THREE: WHATEVER A SPIDER CAN

In this third act, the heroes track down what could be their first Skrull invader masquerading as Spider-Man. However, paranoia within the Children of Lost Tarnax is causing the plan to unravel.

SCENE 1: GORDON VS. KURT

Whether the heroes are called back to the safehouse or wake up there the next morning, they're told by Gordon to meet back in the briefing room for some new information. Read the following to the players:

Once in the briefing room, you see Agent Gordon sitting in his customary spot at the end of the table. "Agent Kurt won't be joining us today," he says curtly. "So take a seat and I'll tell you what we've learned."

Behind the Scenes

Go'bak had the file decrypted — a trivial task for Skrull technology — and learned that A.I.M. were investigating a way to uncover Skrulls. The theories they were investigating were cross-referenced against a Skrull database, and it may be nascent technology tied to the Spider-Man of the year 2099, who has come back to the modern day a few times previously. Go'bak, being paranoid, is convinced that his plans must be at a critical juncture if that technology has persisted into the future. He needs to find out what this Spider-Man knows of the success of Go'bak's plans.

However, Go'bak isn't sure who to trust with the next phase of his plan. That's why he's frozen Kl'rt out and is throwing the heroes against this time-traveling interloper. If all goes well and this future Spider-Man is destroyed, he can continue with his invasion plans and use the incident to manipulate the heroes further. If, however, his plan is about to unravel, he wants to be able to sacrifice his catspaws and his followers as a shield to extract himself with the information he's gathered. Once he's escaped, he can create a new plan to undermine Emperor Hulkling.

Kl'rt realizes he's running out of time before Go'bak stumbles onto his infiltration and interference. Kl'rt's worried his cover is blown, so he needs to push the heroes harder to force Go'bak to make a mistake.

If the heroes didn't bring back the file, they're informed that the agents were able to recover the file through undisclosed "alternate means" and had their analysts working overnight to crack the file. (The truth of how this happened is covered in Act Two, Scene 4.)

Here's what Gordon reveals:

- First, that some Skrulls are emulating specific superhuman abilities as well as super heroes themselves. Gordon mentions that these Skrulls are similar to the "so-called Super-Skrull, but much more effective."
- Second, the Skrulls used A.I.M. technology to defeat Spider-Man in the past few days, replacing him with a Skrull. However, the replacement Skrull may not have had a thorough briefing, as this Spider-Man doesn't exhibit the same powers, and even has the wrong costume. He then shows them an image of Spider-Man 2099 (although he doesn't use that name).

Gordon informs the heroes they need to find and defeat this false Spider-Man, and bring him back for interrogation. He then dismisses the heroes, refusing to take any questions and just telling them to "get it done, and don't listen to anything this infiltrator has to say." Characters who attempt to discern if Gordon is telling the truth can make action checks vs. TN 13 to learn that the story has some holes in it.

Kurt's Side of the Story

After the heroes are dismissed, Kurt will be waiting for them outside the briefing room and encourage them to grab a bite to eat in the commissary. Once there, read the following:

As soon as you step into the commissary, Kurt quickly shuts the door and waves his key card near it. You hear a soft beep and a thump as the door locks behind him. After that's done, he turns and looks at you, and the customary smile has fallen off his face.

"Look, we don't have long to talk. There's something you need to know."

Kurt will explain that he thinks something is wrong with Agent Gordon. The information about the alleged Spider-Man replacement doesn't strike him as plausible, but it's clear Gordon wants this man for some reason. Kurt's worried that there might be a larger game being played here, but he's not sure what it is — finding this strange Spider-Man might hold the answers to what's going on.

He'll then encourage the heroes to be careful and reveal the secret door behind the vending machine, allowing them to leave the commissary without being seen by Gordon from the briefing room. If the heroes try to ask questions, Kurt will just say there isn't any time and continue with his story. Characters who attempt to discern if Kurt is telling the truth can make action checks vs. TN 13 to learn that his story is mostly true, but he's still hiding something.

If the heroes ask to borrow Kurt's Richards device that forces Skrulls to reveal themselves, he'll be reluctant but eventually give it to them.

Avoiding the Trap

It's entirely possible that, between Gordon's strange behavior and Kurt's warning, the heroes will refuse to track down Spider-Man. If they stay at the safehouse, Gordon will eventually find them and demand to know why they aren't out getting the Skrull imposter. Kurt will also encourage them to leave, saying only that finding this Spider-Man might hold the key to what's going on.

If the heroes push, Gordon may decide to simply attack the heroes. If this happens, jump to Act Four, Scene 1b.

SCENE 2: FINDING A SPIDER-SKRULL

Unlike with Act Two, the heroes aren't given any leads to follow. They'll need to investigate on their own. There are a few methods they can use to try and track this Spider-Man down. (Note: In most cases, the Investigator Trait will provide an edge to these action checks.)

- Crawling the Web: As a popular super hero, there are a wide variety of social media accounts and blogs devoted to Spider-Man sightings. A Vigilance vs. TN 10 action check will uncover some recent sightings in the past couple of days of what appears to be a new suit for Spider-Man: black with red trim and a red skull-like design on the chest. Reviewing the various geotags, the heroes can narrow the sightings down to a residential part of Queens.
- The Daily Bugle: This news organization has closely followed Spider-Man during his career, both antagonistically and (more rarely) supportive. The latest edition of the newspaper doesn't have much on this "new" Spider-Man, but the website does have a recent article criticizing his new suit, comparing it unfavorably to an old black-and-white suit of his. A Vigilance vs. TN 10 action check reveals the picture included with the article has a small sign in the corner that belongs to a family-owned bodega in Queens.
- Asking Around: Heroes with appropriate Connections Traits can be pointed to either of the above options without requiring an action check. Alternatively, asking around with people who are hardcore Spider-Man spotters or reporters that cover the super hero beat will need an Ego vs. TN 10 action check. If successful, the hero will learn that Spidey has some new costume and was last seen around a residential part of Queens.

If all else fails, Miguel O'Hara is actually looking for the heroes himself. Part of his research prior to coming to the modern day was uncovering contemporary files in old computer backups left intact in 2099. In those files he discovered the body scans of the heroes, along with the plans to replace them with super-powered Skrulls, so he suspects they may have already been replaced with Skrulls. As such, he is trying to find the heroes as much as they're trying to find him.

Why is Spider-Man 2099 Here?

Miguel O'Hara's timeline/dimension, Earth-2099, was newly reformed after an altercation with Norman Osborn. However, he started noticing errors and inconsistencies in the world around him. Worse, some of the people he fought alongside to take down Norman Osborn turned out to be Skrulls put into place decades back. Since he remembers the timeline as it should be (possibly due to the time he's spent in his past), he agrees to be sent back in time to stop these events.

Can We Talk?

Once Spider-Man 2099 is found, or he finds the heroes, move the Players ribbon to the rooftop map. Put the player's hero tokens in the alleyway to the south, and add Miguel's counter there as well (he's actually hanging from one of the walls).

If the heroes immediately attack, go right to Scene 3, using the "On the Attack" section. If O'Hara finds the heroes before he finds them, or if the heroes approach in a non-hostile fashion, read the following to the players:

You see Spider-Man clinging to the side of a building. His costume is different from the red-and-blue one you've seen on a thousand front pages. This one is black, with jagged red highlights and a red skull motif on the front. He looks you up and down from his strange vantage point.

"Look, there isn't an easy way to say this, so I'll just spit it out," he says, his voice muffled by his mask. "Are you Skrulls?"

If the heroes don't want to listen, go to Scene 3, using the "On the Attack" section.

Otherwise, Miguel will attempt to sort out if the heroes are Skrulls or not. Unlike his modern-day counterparts, Miguel is generally serious, with his rare moments of humor being more sarcastic than flippant. He is, however, a brilliant scientist with a strong hatred of corporate evildoers, such as those at A.I.M.

He only has hazy knowledge of the heroes that's at least fifty years out of date, and he doesn't have any devices or technology to discern if they are Skrulls or not. Still, as far as he knows, he's landed at the time before the theoretical future Skrull invasion has taken place, so he's wavering between suspicious and hopeful.

Let the players role-play with Miguel for a while, then have the hero who is doing the most talking make an Ego vs. TN 15 action check. Give the heroes an edge if they have some concrete way to prove they are who they say they are, such as revealing their secret identities or using the handheld device taken from Kurt.

If the roll fails, Miguel will pretend to believe them, but then attack at an opportune moment. Go to Scene 3, using the "On the Attack" section.

If the roll succeeds, Miguel believes them. Go to Scene 3, using the "On the Defensive" section.

If the roll is a Fantastic success, Miguel will stay with the heroes until the end of the adventure. There's more information in the sidebar "What Happens to Miguel?"

SCENE 3: 2099 REASONS TO FIGHT

The previous scene determines if Miguel O'Hara (Core Rulebook, p. 238) is on the attack or on the defensive.

On the Attack

Read the following:

Suddenly, you hear footsteps pounding down the street. Some of the agents you've been working with are running down the street towards you. One of them points at Spider-Man. "There! That's the Skrull we're looking for!"

Add as many Skrull agents (in human guise) to the map as there are players.

Miguel's main goal will be to escape. If he can get to the edge of the map and stay there for one round without anyone being within one square of him, he'll have escaped. Powers like Jump 1 and Hit & Run will be useful in helping him to escape.

The Skrull agents will attempt to subdue him, but they won't be too picky about injuring or inconveniencing heroes in the process. At this point they're more concerned about stopping the time traveler from upsetting their invasion plans than keeping the charade up around the heroes.

If Miguel is captured, go to Act Four, Scene 1c.

If Miguel escapes, the Skrull agents will tell the heroes to head back to the safehouse for debriefing. If the heroes refuse, the Skrull agents turn into versions of the heroes! Switch the Skrull Agents with Skrull Duplicate tokens (resetting their Health and Focus, if needed), and go to "On the Defensive," but ignore any references to Miguel.

If the heroes agree to go back to the safehouse, the agents take them back to a large, unmarked black van and are driven back to the safehouse. In the Page Toolbar, move the "Player" ribbon to the Safehouse page, and put the hero tokens in the scanning room (B2). Then, read the following to the players.

As you walk up to the large metal door, you notice something out of the corner of your eye. The agents that came in with you are changing! They're turning into… versions of yourself!

Swap the Skrull Agent tokens with the Skrull Duplicates (resetting their Health and Focus, if needed) — Go'bak has decided that the heroes are now a liability that need to be disposed of. Go to Act Four, Scene 2, but there are no additional government agents to help.

On the Defensive

Read the following:

Suddenly, you hear footsteps pounding down the street. You turn to see… versions of yourselves! One of them points at the group of you. "There! Those are the Skrulls we've been looking for!"

Add the Skrull Duplicate tokens to the map. Their goals are twofold: The primary goal is to capture Spider-Man 2099. Their secondary goal is to cause confusion as to which heroes are authentic and which are Skrulls. If they have the opportunity to capture the heroes, thus solidifying their infiltration, they'll take that chance, but simply causing confusion and chaos is good enough for the secondary goal.

Miguel, for his part, will attempt to keep to the rooftops to avoid the Skrulls. Once he loses sight of a hero, though, he'll make Ego vs. TN 10 action checks to discern which character is which — if he fails, he'll believe the hero is the Skrull infiltrator, and vice versa. If he makes this mistake three times during the fight, he'll switch to trying to escape the Skrulls and the heroes; if he can get to the edge of the map and stay there for one round without anyone being within one square of him, he'll have escaped.

If the heroes are captured, go to Act Four, Scene 1a. If they're not, whether Spider-Man is captured or not, go to Act Four, Scene 1b.

On the Rooftops

Regardless of whether the heroes are on the attack or on the defensive, the Spider-Man of 2099 will try to keep the fight to the rooftops, where he has the most advantage.

D1: Restaurant

This is the roof of a restaurant that's 50 feet above ground. It's an older brownstone building with several skylights, as well as two cooling fans.

D2: Abandoned Building

This old industrial building has been abandoned for years. The roof is 60 feet from the ground, and has two empty water towers perched on it, which would allow an Average-sized character to hide behind them.

D3: Refurbished Office Building

This roof is 100 feet above street level, and has a large number of industrial cooling fans mounted on the roof to provide air conditioning to the dozens of offices contained within. There's also an entrance to the north that leads to the interior of the building. The metal door requires 40 damage to punch through.

D4: Apartment Building

The roof of this apartment building is 90 feet above the ground, and contains a swimming pool as well as some tables and chairs, both for sitting and for lounging. A door to the west provides access to the interior. There are three Average Civilians lounging here.

Art by Will Sliney & Antonio Fabela

D5: Bodega

This local bodega has a sloped roof that's 50 feet off the ground at its highest point. A few cooling fans dot the roof. Characters standing on the foot need to make Agility vs. TN 8 action checks each round to keep their balance.

D6/7: Building and Construction Yard

The building (D6) is being renovated and expanded. The roof is 50 feet off the ground, and the surface is covered in scaffolding. The construction yard next to it (D7) is at ground level, and has some construction equipment and supplies.

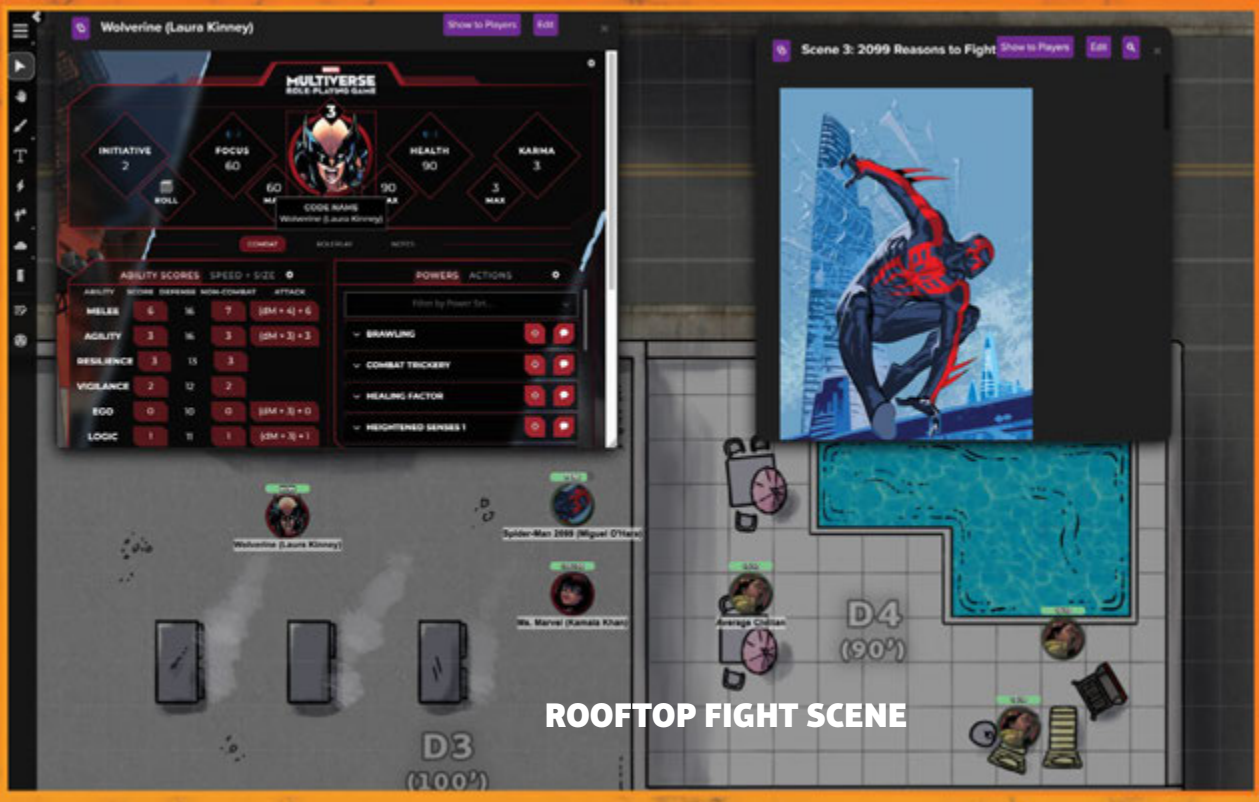

D8: Abandoned Building

This building, its roof only 30 feet from the ground, also stands empty and covered in graffiti. It may be next in line to be knocked down after the construction work next door is completed.

What Happens to Miguel?

In general, assuming Miguel isn't captured, he'll head off to find the Skrulls on his own. Even if the heroes convince him they're all on the same side, Miguel would rather work on his own, because he doesn't completely trust the heroes.

That said, if the heroes scored a Fantastic success in convincing Miguel of their intentions, or they find some other way to completely convince him of their sincerity, he'll stay with them until the end of the scenario. Make sure his token is added to the safehouse map in Act Four, and either control him yourself as Narrator, or give control of the character to one of the players to portray along with their own character.

ACT FOUR: SUPER-SKRULL

In this act the true plans of the Children of Lost Tarnax stand revealed, and the heroes find themselves in the middle of an intense conflict.

There are three ways the characters can enter this act:

- If the heroes (possibly with Spider-Man 2099) were captured by the Skrulls, go to Scene 1a.
- If the heroes turned on the Skrulls and defeated them and now want to assault the safehouse, go to Scene 1b.
- If the heroes captured Spider-Man 2099 and return him to the safehouse, go to Scene 1c.

SCENE 1A: CAPTURED BY THE SKRULLS!

Move the Players ribbon to the safehouse map, and put the hero tokens at B19, the hidden Skrull lab. Put one on the table in the center of the room, and three in the containment pods to the north. If there are more than four heroes, put the others against the wall to the east. Also put Go'bek's token here (in Skrull form) along with three Skrull Agents. Put Kl'rt's token (in his human guise as Kurt) at B17.

Read the following to the players:

After your capture, the Skrulls placed strange collars around your neck. You immediately went unconscious. When you re-awaken you find yourself inside a strange-looking laboratory, strapped down to medical tables. Skrulls in white lab coats check tablets and computer screens.

"Ah, I see our patients are awake," says a familiar-sounding voice. Agent Gordon steps into view, and within moments his face turns into that of a Skrull. "I think the time for games is at an end."

At that moment, an alarm sounds through the complex. One of the Skrull lab assistants taps furiously at her tablet. "Intruder alert, leader!"

The intruders can be one of several possibilities:

- If the heroes befriended Spider-Man 2099, and he managed to avoid being captured, then he has found the safehouse and broken his way in. Put his token at B5. Any Skrull Agents at locations B1 through B4 are unconscious.
- If the heroes had C.I.A. contacts or otherwise attempted to get in touch with Maria Hill or some other government agency, this is a group of government agents who are attempting to reclaim the facility. Put as many government agent tokens at B5 as there are players. Any Skrull Agents at locations B1 through B4 are unconscious. (Government agents use the same Character Profile as S.H.I.E.L.D. Agents, Core Rulebook, p. 232.)
- If neither of these is true, then the alarm is false, set up by Kl'rt to sow confusion. All Skrull Agents at B17 are unconscious, and he'll claim the intruders fled through the door to B12.

Infiltrators will take one round to go through a location: B5 to B12, B12 to B17, and B17 to B19. In the first round, the Skrull Agents in the lab at B19 will open the secret door to B17 and move towards the disruption. Kl'rt, who is in B17, will override the door controls, forcing it to stay open.

The heroes have three opportunities to break their restraints and join the fight. They are computerized, flexible, and strong — it will take a Melee, Agility, or Logic vs. TN 13 action check to break free. If the heroes have a power that would allow them to easily escape, such as Slip Free, they don't need to make an action check. Any heroes not free once the invaders (or Kl'rt) arrive will be freed.

As soon as the heroes are freed, go to Scene 2.

SCENE 1B: LET'S GET THOSE SKRULLS!

Read the following to the players:

Now it's clear who the Skrulls really are. They were manipulating you into whatever plans they had in store for Earth. As you're considering the ramifications of this, a woman in a suit and sunglasses approaches you. You tense in anticipation of another fight, but she puts her hands up. "Whoa! Not a Skrull. Totally human. But I think you need to hear this."

She holds up a cell phone. "Director Maria Hill wants to talk to you."

The person on the call is really Director Hill. If the heroes had been trying to get a hold of her, she'll apologize for not being able to get in touch sooner. Then she'll explain.

- The reason she and her associates had been unavailable was because they were dealing with reports of rogue government agents operating in New York, and specifically out of a decommissioned SHIELD safehouse. Until she knew who she could trust, she had put all outgoing communication on lockdown.
- Last night she got a report about a break-in at an A.I.M. lab, and the word "Skrull" popped up as part of her investigation. Although her team couldn't find anything at the A.I.M. lab, she started to suspect that another secret invasion was in the works.
- She put a surveillance team on the safehouse, and followed the heroes to determine if they were Skrulls or not. When it was clear which side they were on, she approached them. She wants to raid the safehouse immediately and take out the Skrulls before they can vacate and start up their invasion somewhere else.

Hill plans to raid the safehouse with or without the heroes' help, but she'd prefer if they worked with her. If they agree, the agent with the phone issues each hero with a black security card, which will override all the security doors in the safehouse. They then leave for the safehouse.

In the Page Toolbar, move the "Player" ribbon to the Safehouse page. Put Go'bak in the secret Skrull lab (B19), Kl'rt in the open lab (B17), and the heroes in the barbershop elevator (B1), along with government agent tokens equal to the number of players. Government agents will generally fan out in pairs and leave the heroes to do the primary work on the raid. That said, if needed, they use the same Character Profile as S.H.I.E.L.D. Agents, Core Rulebook, p. 232.

Go to Scene 2.

Thanks, Director Hill, But No Thanks

The heroes may decide that they don't need Director Hill's help with the raid, or they might not want to risk lives in the attempt. If that's the case, Hill will agree to simply monitor their progress and reserve her agents to handling any mop-up, as well as detailing Skrulls who attempt to escape the safehouse.

However, it's entirely possible that the heroes will distrust Maria Hill — potentially because they won't have any assurance she isn't also a Skrull, and possibly because of her past history of manipulation.

Hill will try once or twice to convince the heroes, particularly asking if they really want to let the Skrulls get away with their plans, but ultimately she'll leave them be if they don't want to participate. If that's the case, Hill decided not to risk an invasion without the heroes' help.

SCENE 1C: SPIDER-MAN DEFEATED!

Read the following to the players:

After capturing this ersatz Spider-Man, one of the agents places a strange collar around his neck. As soon as it clicks shut, Spider-Man falls limp, as if sent immediately unconscious. The agent smirks. "These neural inhibitor collars are great. He'll be out like a light for an hour. Let's get him into the van."

Move the Players ribbon to the safehouse map, and put the hero tokens (as well as Spider-Man) at B17. Also put Gordon and Kurt's tokens here as well. Then, read the following to the players:

You make your way back to the safehouse without incident, and the agents help you haul Spider-Man back to the lab. Kurt looks surprised, while Gordon looks pleased. "Excellent! Excellent! Just put him anywhere, and we'll get things ready for the experiment."

Kurt spun to look at Gordon. "Don't you mean interrogation?"

Gordon smiled cruelly, and within moments his face turns into that of a Skrull. "Oh, I think we're well past those games now, soldier."

At that moment, an alarm sounds through the complex. One of the Skrull lab assistants taps furiously at her tablet. "Intruder alert, leader!"

The intruders can be one of two possibilities:

- If the heroes had C.I.A. contacts or otherwise attempted to get in touch with Maria Hill or some other government agency, this is a group of government agents who are attempting to reclaim the facility. Put as many government agent tokens at B5 as there are players. Any Skrull Agents at locations B1, B2, and B3 are unconscious. (Government agents use the same Character Profile as S.H.I.E.L.D. Agents, Core Rulebook, p. 232.)
- Otherwise, the alarm is false, set up by Kl'rt to sow confusion from a button in his jacket.

Go to Scene 2.

SCENE 2: SAFEHOUSE SHOOTOUT

The base is now on alert. Use the following key references for the base, modified as needed based on which version of Scene 1 your group played through. A few overall tactics to keep in mind:

- All yellow and red security doors close, and the heroes' access cards no longer open the doors. Access cards will need to be taken from a Skrull Agent or Skrull Duplicate (for a yellow access card), or from Go'bak (for a red one). Kl'rt will use his card to open doors for the heroes if he is able. Maria Hill's agents have black override cards that can open any door (and the heroes may have one themselves, depending on how Scene 1b played out).
- Flip all Skrull agents near the heroes to their Skrull side. If a Skrull Agent manages to get away from the heroes, flip them back to the human agent side. They'll attempt to confuse the situation as much as possible by pretending to be sympathetic government agents to get close to the heroes and attack them.
- If the Skrull Duplicates weren't already dispatched in Act Three, put them in the agent dorms in B9. Like with the Skrull Agents, Skrull Duplicates will attempt to confuse the situation, acting as if they are the heroes and the heroes are the Skrulls. An Ego or Logic action check against the Skrull's Ego or Logic defense will discern if the subterfuge works or not — Ego is the characters are judging the Skrull's acting, or Logic if the heroes are looking for mistakes in the impersonation.

- Karl will reveal himself to be the Super-Skrull, who starts attacking the Skrulls in non-lethal ways. He won't attempt to help the heroes in any way. However, if one of the heroes attempts to kill a Skrull, or of one of the heroes looks to be on the verge of dying themselves, Kl'rt will stop them, as he has sworn that no one will lose their life by his hand and he wants to make sure there's no shadow of guilt that could be cast on him.
- Go'bak will try to escape, by any means necessary. He will gladly sacrifice any Skrull Agents or Skrull Duplicates to accomplish this. Kl'rt's main goal is to capture Go'bak alive.

Just How Many People are in This Safehouse?

We've been intentionally vague about how many Children of Lost Tarnax there are. The truth is, there are as many Skrulls as there need to be to make the scenario interesting for your players. There are at least Go'bak, Kl'rt, and the Skrull Duplicates, but the other Skrull Agents are just suggestions. Feel free to remove or add some as needed.

Similarly, there are as many government agents as you need to have. We recommend an amount equal to the number of players but again you can adjust this down if the heroes are in a strong position (such as having Miguel O'Hara on their side) or up if the fight looks to be too challenging.

B1: Barbershop Elevator (Alert)

The switch that activates the elevator doesn't work unless someone has a red access card, or one of Maria Hill's black override cards.

B2: Scanning Room (Alert)

The scanner has been shut down, but the turrets are active. If there is a Skrull Agent in either B4 room, that turret will fire on the Skrull Agents' initiative, using the Agent's Agility (+2). Each turret has a +1 damage multiplier, a range of 10 squares, and can take 40 damage before it is destroyed.

B3: Security Room (Alert)

The body scanner in this area is turned off, but there is one Skrull Agent here.

B4: Turret Control (Alert)

One Skrull Agent is in each of these rooms, managing the turrets in B2.

B5: Hallway (Alert)

The hallway is empty.

B7: Guest Dorm (Alert)

If a character enters a guest dorm, the door will close and lock behind them, requiring a new yellow, red, or black access card to open. At the beginning of the next round, the room fills with sleeping gas — unless the character makes a Resilience vs. TN 10 action check, they take 15 Focus damage. If the character falls to 0 Focus, they are unconscious.

B9: Hallway to Agent Dorms (Secure/Alert)

This hallway is empty. However, the floor of this hallway is pressure-sensitive. Unless the hero avoids standing on the floor, or weighs less than an Average-sized person, the base goes to Alert status if it isn't already.

B10: Agent Dorm (Secure/Alert)

If the safehouse is not already on Alert status, each dorm contains a Skrull sleeping in their natural form on the bed.

If the safehouse is on Alert status, and if the Skrull Duplicates weren't defeated, each one starts here and makes their way to the fight via B9.

If the safehouse is on Alert status and the Skrull Duplicates were defeated, these rooms are empty.

B11: Weapons Locker (Secure/Alert)

One Skrull Agent is in here, weapon ready.

The lockers contain the following weapons:

- 20 pistols (range 10 spaces, damage multiplier +1)
- 10 rifles (range 20 spaces, damage multiplier +1)
- 30 grenades (range 10 spaces, damage multiplier x2)
- 1 bow (range 15 spaces, damage multiplier +1)

B12: Nexus (Alert)

There are two Skrull Agents here, guarding the door to the lab (B17).

B13: Conference Room (Alert)

This room is empty. As soon as the safehouse changes to Alert status, the computer console here activates a hidden circuit and melts itself, destroying all data contained within.

B16: Commissary (Alert)

As with Secure, but the secret entrance to B16 is open.

B17: Lab (Alert)

Unless otherwise stated, Kl'rt is in this lab along with two Skrull Agents. They are here to stop anyone from entering the secret lab at B19, but in reality Kl'rt is trying to stay close to Go'bak to be ready to capture him as soon as Go'bak steps out of the lab.

B18: Storage (Secure/Alert)

This area is off-limits to the heroes, but on the surface it just looks like a common warehouse-style storage room: concrete floors and metal shelves covered with cardboard boxes as well as wooden and metal crates. To the north there's a forklift, but it's covered in cobwebs and hasn't run in years.

However, if the heroes start looking through the boxes, they'll realize that while most are things like food and office supplies, a few of the crates contain strange devices and metal objects. Characters with the right Traits or Tags might recognize them as Skrull in origin; otherwise, it requires a Logic vs. TN 16 action check.

B19: Secret Lab (Alert)

This lab looks radically different from the one next door. All of the devices here look alien and strange. There are three Average-sized tubes against the north wall, with magnetic locks to keep someone inside. The table in the center also has devices to keep a character strapped down, as well as two articulating arms with a variety of deadly-looking probes and blades. The west wall has a variety of computer banks and tables covered with various equipment and scientific devices.

The tubes to the north not only act as tiny cells to hold unruly people within, but also can be programmed to reconstruct a Skrull's DNA, making them immune to the Skrull detection devices created by Reed Richards. When used on a human, however, their DNA is simply broken down, killing them painfully and messily.

The arms on the table in the center can be controlled manually. It requires a Logic vs. TN 12 action check to use them if the character hasn't previously operated them before. Each blade has a mono-molecular edge, doubling the user's Melee damage modifier. A character has to be on or next to the table to use the arms, however, and using an arm requires an action.

SCENE 3: EPILOGUE

If the heroes are defeated, overpowered by the Skrulls, Go'bak will attempt to escape, and any conscious Skull Agents and Skrull Defectors will try to leave with him. Kl'rt, if able, will take Go'bak down. He'll then explain the situation to the heroes (below).

More likely, the heroes will be able to defeat the Skrull Agents and Skrull Duplicates. In this case, Kl'rt will reveal himself to be the Super-Skrull, if he hasn't already. After all the Skrulls are carted off, read the following to the players:

The Super-Skrull looks at you imperiously as he explains. "This group of Skrulls were a radical offshoot known as the Children of Lost Tarnax — a Skrull supremacy group. The Skrulls have joined forces with our ancient enemies, the Kree, under Emperor Dorrek VIII — the half-Skrull, half-Kree you know as Hulkling. The Children see Emperor Dorrek as an abomination, and they were attempting to stage their own secret invasion plans in order to replace powerful superhumans to get close to the Emperor. Go'bak — the one you knew as Gordon — is their leader. I don't know how he found a way to circumvent the devices that Reed Richards created, but he did. And from that knowledge did I start to develop a plan to stop him."

He sighs, looking as if he'd rather be doing anything else than explaining this. "Due to my… past misdeeds… my emperor has sentenced me to diplomatic service. Further, I am not allowed to take a life or allow one to die due to my neglect. As I could not allow the Skrull empire… my apologies, the Skrull race to come under suspicion due to Go'bak's actions, I had few options. I infiltrated his operation in order to gain hard evidence I could bring before my emperor — enough to satisfy our Kree allies that Go'bak acts alone. That is why I did what I could to rouse your suspicions of Go'bak's activities, without revealing my true intentions to him.

"Trust me — it would be much simpler were I able to murder him and present his head to my emperor." He shakes his head. "But these days, I am reduced to working with Earthlings to police my own."

Kl'rt isn't entirely telling the truth here, but rather painting himself in the best possible light, on the off chance that word of this operation will get back to his emperor. Regardless, he will then open the door to the secret lab, if the heroes don't know about it already. If Go'bak isn't captured, he'll leave to find and recover Go'bak. If Hill or her agents capture Go'bak, Kl'rt will be happy to let her take him and his Children into custody.

If Maria Hill's agents aren't already there, they'll show up and want to know what happened. Once she gets their report, Hill will thank the heroes for their part in staving off another secret invasion. If the heroes don't trust Hill or her agents (perhaps thinking them to be yet more Skrulls), she will reveal that she has determined yet another way to detect Skrulls: by drawing and baking the blood to see if it turns green.

Dangling Threads

If you are running Revenge of the Super-Skrull as a self-contained adventure, the story ends there. Hopefully you and your players had a good time! However, if this is part of an Ongoing Series, there are a couple of additional things to consider.

First is whether the heroes go up in rank or not. There's some advice on this in the Marvel Multiverse Role-Playing Game, but in general this adventure is worth one milestone towards that goal.

Second is to decide how much of the consequences from this adventure linger. There are several possible story hooks you can use as the foundation for possible future adventures:

- Go'bak: If Go'bak escaped, he could try to rebuild the Children of Lost Tarnax. It wouldn't be the first time he's lost people as part of his cause, and he is a patient (if paranoid) Skrull. He could become a regularly recurring villain for the heroes to face.
- Kl'rt: Although Kl'rt's goals aligned closely with those of the heroes this time, that doesn't mean he's happy with having to cooperate with Earthlings in the defense of the Skrulls. He may ask the heroes' help again in future — perhaps to help him capture Go'bak — or he may just manipulate them for his own ends.
- A.I.M.: Why was A.I.M. interested in finding ways to uncover Skrulls? Perhaps they had some plan of their own to use the Skrulls. The heroes might want to track down those plans and deal with A.I.M.'s schemes.
- Maria Hill: Depending on how the adventure panned out, Hill might feel like she's indebted to the heroes, or she may assume she's pulled their butts out of the fire and they owe her a favor. And the C.I.A. certainly have uses for people with superpowers and experience dealing with the tangled web of espionage.
- Duplicates: If the Skrull Duplicates escape, they might attempt to discredit the heroes further — perhaps by performing crimes in their identities, or misrepresenting themselves to the heroes' friends and allies. Even if they've been captured, however, it's possible that the fight with Spider-Man 2099 led to some awkward cell phone photos or police reports that the heroes are going to have to explain away.

Eyes: Blue Hair: Blond Size: Average
Distinguishing Features: None
Occupation: Entertainer
Origin: Special Training
Teams: Avengers, Thunderbolts
Base: Brooklyn, New York City

History
After his parents were killed in a tragic car accident, Clint Barton ran away to join the circus. Naturally talented, he quickly made a name as Hawkeye, one of the premier archers. Barton might have stayed a performer into his old age if a chance encounter hadn't brought Iron Man to his circus. Inspired by Iron Man's exploits, Barton created a costume and began fighting crime as Hawkeye.

While Barton sometimes operates solo, he's best known for his work with the Avengers. After years of such adventures, Barton trained and mentored Kate Bishop into becoming a second Hawkeye.

Personality
Clint Barton is well aware that his lack of super-powers places the upper limits of his abilities well below those of most super heroes. He sometimes puts on an arrogant attitude to cover his insecurities. Barton is sometimes led astray by his passions, but his conscience always brings him back to the fight for justice.

Imbued with superhuman strength and durability, Lucas broke free of his prison and returned to the Harlem of his youth.

As a fugitive, Lucas adopted the name Luke Cage and began working as a Hero for Hire. Distinguishing Features: None
Occupation: Student
Origin: Inhuman
Teams: Champions, Protectors

History
From a young age, Kamala Khan idolized Captain Marvel (Carol Danvers), who exemplified a sort of uncomplicated femininity missing from Khan's own life as the teenage daughter of Pakistani immigrants. One night, while sneaking out of her parents' house to go to a party, Khan was exposed to a mysterious cloud of Terrigen Mist that activated the Inhuman DNA lurking in her system, giving her the power to grow, shrink and morph into whatever shape or appearance she pleased.

Donning a costume of her own, Khan adopted Carol Danvers' former alias and became the new Ms. Marvel. In short order, she met her idol Carol and even joined the Avengers, but she later left them to form the new teenage Champions.

Personality
Khan is a lovable and friendly nerd and a natural leader. She's also a teenager still trying to figure out the specifics of who she is, but she's gradually becoming more confident in herself and her identity.

BIOGRAPHY

Eyes: Green Hair: Black Size: Average
Distinguishing Features: Retractable adamantium claws in hands and feet
Occupation: Adventurer
Origin: High-Tech: Cybernetics, Mutant
Teams: X-Force, X-Men

History
Laura Kinney was created as part of a secret attempt to re-create the experiment that gave the original Wolverine (Logan) his adamantium skeleton. She's a partial clone of Logan himself, with DNA mixed in from Sarah Kinney, the geneticist who created her.

The shadowy figures funding this experiment intended for Laura to be an assassin, but Sarah Kinney took pity on her creation and helped Laura escape from their clutches. Free from her captors, Laura tracked down her genetic father and became his protégé. Now she fights alongside Logan, both of them acting under the codename Wolverine.

Personality
Although the people who funded her creation did their best to erase her humanity, Laura Kinney has grown into a mature and empathetic young woman. She serves as a levelheaded counterpart to her younger, freewheeling genetic twin sister, Gabrielle Kinney (Scout).
